Chinese Planes Rise to Defend Nanking

AAA Wants To Cut Crops 15-30 Million Acres in '38

Production Limit of 275 to 290 Million Acres Desired.

Bureau Powerless Without New Law

Proposal Would Dovetail With Ever-Normal Granary Plan.

By Robert C. Albright.

Under limited AAA soil conservation machinery, the Administration yesterday called for a slash of from 15,000,000 to 30,000,000 acres in next year's major crops.

But officials admitted they were powerless to compel a reduction until crop control legislation is enacted by Congress.

Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace disclosed the 275,000,000 to 290,000,000-acre "goal" for 1938 in announcing the department's new $500,000,000 agricultural conservation program.

Goes Below Average.

Establishing a national goal for soil-depleting crops and a national objective for soil-building crops and practices, the 1938 soil-depleting limitation urged upon farmers marked a cut under the 305,000,000-acre average of the last ten years.

Farmers will receive payments for keeping within soil-depleting crop goals and for attaining soil-building objectives, but participation is voluntary, and the acreage limitation lacks the binding compulsion of the invalidated original AAA.

Revised and carefully planned to dovetail into the proposed crop control and "ever normal granary" plan, should Congress act in regular or special session, the new soil conservation program clearly anticipated supplementary farm action by Congress.

"The agricultural conservation program," said Secretary Wallace, "is not a production control program. In the absence of other legislation, normal weather conditions over several seasons again will result in the accumulation of burdensome surpluses.

"But this fact does not preclude the use of the present program to further conservation and help maintain economic gains which agriculture has made since 1932."

Although Wallace made no mention of a special farm session of Congress to control surplusage, he has urged such action on the President, who must reach a decision shortly after his return from his Western tour. Congress has agreed to make farm legislation its next order of business.

Recently A. G. Black, chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, declared the soil conservation program "is clearly incapable of meeting the crisis which may arise in 12 months or 24 months with respect to farm prices." Like Wallace, Black declared an ever-normal granary program is needed, and the present soil program is too "limited."

Inquiries to Start Within Week.

Roving sub-committees of the Senate Agriculture Committee will take the field beginning next week to sound out Nation-wide farm sentiment for control legislation and begin an actual draft of a new bill early in November. The AAA an-

Gen. Denhardt Slain in Street on Eve of Trial; Dead Fiancee's Brother Admits Firing Shots

Attorney Pleads for Life With Assassins Whom He Recognizes.

By the United Press.

Shelbyville, Ky., Sept. 20.—Brig. Gen. Henry H. Denhardt, 61-year-old former lieutenant-governor of Kentucky, was shot fatally by three assassins on a downtown street tonight a few hours before he was to have gone on trial a second time on a charge of slaying his fiancee.

Within 15 minutes after the shooting, the sheriff had taken three brothers of the slain woman, Mrs. Verna Taylor, into custody for questioning. The brothers are Jack, Roy and Dr. E. S. Garr, a La Grange veterinary.

Patrolman Jeptha Tracey said Roy Garr admitted firing the fatal shots.

He said the brothers surrendered quietly and were taken to jail as a huge crowd gathered.

Denhardt fell before a fusillade of shots. He was walking on Main street in the center of the downtown section with his attorney, Rodes Myers, Bowling Green, when the shooting occurred. The gunmen stepped from a shadow and all fired simultaneously.

Myers recognized the assailants and pleaded with them not to shoot, the sheriff's office reported. Myers was not injured.

BRIG. GEN. DENHARDT.

Denhardt dropped where he stood, seven bullets in his body, at least one through the heart. He was carried to the front steps of the Armstrong Hotel and pronounced dead by Dr. A. C. Weakley.

Myers said that as Denhardt lay on the street the firing continued and he declared Roy Garr shouted, "You are the —— who killed my sister—and I am going to kill you."

The soldier-politician had been free on bond since a jury of farmers failed to reach a verdict in his case

Arms Race Must Stop, Eden Warns

Or Britain Will Build Greatest Force on Earth, He Says.

Denies Colonies Useful, Offers Low Tariffs, Praises U. S.

By the Associated Press.

Geneva, Sept. 20.—British Foreign Minister Anthony Eden warned the Fascist powers tonight that unless other nations cease competing for supremacy at arms Britain is determined to build the most powerful military force on earth.

"The government I represent will spare no endeavor to prevent war from engulfing Europe," he told a hushed League of Nations Assembly, which earlier had voted Spain out of its Council.

Eden envisaged trade as a road to international harmony.

"Differences of political ideology," he declared, "need not stultify economic co-operation or even prevent political tolerance.

"But there must be agreement on one point—in economic as well as political spheres the world must choose peace."

Denies Colonies' Usefulness.

Attacking the demands of Germany and Italy for colonies, Eden declared:

"The problem of raw materials is not one of colonies. All colonial territories taken together produce only about 3 per cent of the world supply of raw materials."

But he put forth a solution of the problem in an offer "to abate preferential tariffs in British colonies when they seem unfair and restrict international trade."

Commending the United States for the "vigorous, consistent campaign" against world trade obstacles, Eden declared the British offer "of course must be made subject to such reservations as may be necessary to secure reciprocal advantages to colonial products and meet competition of excessively low-cost producers."

Offers Arms Reduction.

Stressing Britain's rapidly expanding military forces, Eden emphasized his government's willingness to agree to reduction and limitation of armaments "as soon as the other powers indicate an inclination in that direction."

The foreign secretary pleaded that war results "in the impoverishment of the victor to an extent only less than that of the vanquished" and that foreign participation in Spain's war "presents a pregnant danger for the peace of Europe."

Earlier, 52 States gave the Madrid-Valencia government only 23 of a necessary 32 votes to declare her re-eligible for a seat in the council. Five votes were thrown out as defective or blank.

Loss of the Spanish seat resulted in part from the Spanish government's failure to give a South American bloc satisfactory assurances that their refugees would be evacuated from Madrid legations and embassies.

Spain's defeat does not affect her stand as plaintiff before the League against Germany and Italy, on her

New Warning to Japan Hinted As Moore Calls Saito, Confers

U. S. Will Take Part in League's Study of Far East Crisis.

By William V. Nessly.

Japanese Ambassador Hirosi Saito late yesterday was summoned to the State Department, where he was closeted with Acting Secretary of State R. Walton Moore in a secret half-hour conference.

While neither would reveal, at the close of the session, the nature of their discussion, unusual circumstances surrounding the meeting gave rise to the belief that the acting secretary had reiterated this country's stand that Japan would be held responsible for losses suffered by Americans from acts of Japanese military forces. Both Judge Moore and Ambassador Saito confined their comments on the talk to admissions that it was on "the Chinese situation."

The conference came shortly after the United States Government had announced its willingness to participate, to a restricted extent,

U. S. Embassy Evacuated as Other Envoys Stay at Posts

Scores Are Killed In Early Air Raids

Japan Denies Plan to Use Gas; Warned of Harm to Ships.

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

Shanghai (Tuesday), Sept. 21.—Nanking, China's great inland capital, today tensely awaited the shock of a Japanese air raid which threatened to "blow it off the map," while foreign nationals and embassy officials, with the exception of the American embassy, stuck grimly to their posts.

The American embassy staff went aboard the gunboat Luzon last night, but the vessel did not leave its moorings in spite of an earlier official announcement that it would move up the Yangtze at midnight.

The decision of United States Ambassador Nelson T. Johnson to remove his staff from the threatened city followed four bombing raids on the capital yesterday in which scores of Chinese civilians were killed.

City Quiet as Graveyard.

Johnson said he was abandoning the embassy on instructions from Washington.

As noon approached—zero hour set by the Japanese for the bombing—the city became as quiet as a graveyard, except for the bustle of departing refugees.

Although Rear Admiral Kiyoshi Hasegawa, commander of the third Japanese battle fleet, had set the noon deadline for evacuation, few foreign observers believed the powerful Japanese air armada, estimated at more than 200 warplanes, would immediately carry out its threat to "destroy" the city.

It was believed the Japanese commanders wished to give foreigners all possible time to evacuate and a heavy rain that swept the Yangtze Valley early today made it unlikely the planes would attempt their raid until the weather cleared.

Chinese Man Defenses.

Chinese defense positions on the outskirts of the capital were manned and ready for the attack.

Shortly after dawn Chinese planes roared into the air and circled over the capital, belying earlier reports that they would not attempt to give battle to the overwhelmingly superior Japanese force.

A Japanese military spokesman told the United Press that bombing operations at Nanking would be extended to include "not only Chinese military bases, but sections of the city where the Chinese have since transferred their headquarters."

He reiterated that the capital would be "much more dangerous for foreigners than the past two days."

Plan to Use Gas Denied.

The spokesman denied, however, that the Japanese planned to use poison gas, as Chinese sources had reported.

The United States gunboat Guam was ordered to remain at Nanking, draped with a huge American flag, after U. S. naval authorities warned the Japanese they would be held responsible for any damage to American vessels.

Meanwhile 37 Americans, including eight women, remained in the

Major Speeches To Be Barred on Roosevelt Trip

President to Make First Appearance From Train at Cheyenne, Wyo.

By the Associated Press.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Sept. 20.—President Roosevelt will open his West Coast speaking trip with a train-platform talk Friday morning at Cheyenne, Wyo., home town of Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, one of the leading opponents of his Supreme Court enlargement plan.

A tentative itinerary for the two weeks' swing also lists two more appearances in Wyoming the same day, one at Wendover and the other at Casper.

The trip also includes a visit by naval destroyer from Seattle to Victoria, British Columbia, where the President and his official party will be luncheon guests September 30 at the mansion of Lieut. Gov. Eric W. Hamber.

The President already had announced he would speak October 5 at Chicago on his return trip.

Secretary Marvin H. McIntyre said except for an address at Bonneville Dam, on the Columbia River near Portland, Oreg., September 28, the President would deliver "No formal major" speeches.

He added some Senators and other local leaders probably would board the ten-car special en route.

The President will leave at 3 p. m. Eastern Standard Time, Wednesday, traveling via Chicago and Omaha, but making no appearances until the train reaches Cheyenne.

He reaches Casper about 4:30 p.m. the same day, then proceeds overnight to Gardner, Mont., by way of Billings, and Livingston, Mont., arriving at Gardener next Saturday morning.

Here the party will detrain for a motor trip to Yellowstone National Park, boarding the train Sunday afternoon at West Yellowstone.

The President will then go to Boise, Idaho, via Pocatello, arriving next Monday morning. Arriving at Bonneville the morning of September 28, he will motor to the dam for a speech, then drive on to Portland, Oreg., and Vancouver,

Sabotage Hinted As U. S. Refuses Douglas Planes

Los Angeles, Sept. 20 (AP).—George Stratton, executive of the Douglas Corporation, said tonight the War Department has declined temporarily to accept airplanes from the Northrop plant because of "indicated sabotage."

Stratton made public a letter, signed by M. K. B. Wolfe, Army Air Corps representative, September 14, which said, in part:

"As a result of the several recent acts of indicated sabotage, this office will not flight-test or accept the remaining airplanes now on contract until a satisfactory system of manufacturing and inspection is adopted which will prevent a reoccurrence of such acts."

The Northrop plant has been closed by a C. I. O. strike since September 2.

Hubert Wilkins Safe In Arctic Landing

Ottawa, Ont., Sept. 20. (U.P.)—A message received by the radio branch of the Canadian Department of Transport today from its operator at Coppermile, Northwest Territory, said the airplane in which Sir Hubert Wilkins was seeking the Russian transpolar fliers was forced down on a lake near Aklavik Sunday by bad weather. The operator reported that Sir Hubert and his party intended to return to New York as soon as the weather cleared and the plane's motors were checked.

British Money Official Talks To Morgenthau

By Franklyn Waltman.

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau and Sir Frederick Phillips, permanent Undersecretary of the British Exchequer, yesterday began a series of informal conferences which eventually may profoundly affect fiscal and commercial relationships between their two countries, with possible changes in the domestic monetary policies of each nation.

If the conversations between the two officials, which will continue during the remainder of this week, have no other result, they will undoubtedly lead to a better understanding on the part of each of the officials regarding the fiscal and monetary policies of the other's governments and thus lay the basis for more complete co-operation.

Topics Kept Secret.

Secretary Morgenthau declined to discuss the nature of his conversation yesterday with Sir Frederick except to assert that it concerned mutual problems of the two nations; that similar conversations would take place, probably every day this week, and that he did not believe that any formal announcement of the discussions or the conclusions reached would be made.

It is understood, however, that Secretary Morgenthau and his aides have discussed or will discuss with Sir Frederick the operation of the Tripartite Monetary Agreement of last September; American gold policy; the possibilities of an Anglo-American trade agreement and an extension of the 1934 London Silver Agreement, which expires at the end of this year. If the thorny subject of war debts is touched on, it

Two Men Confess Robbing Roosevelt Home; Loot Found

Two colored men arrested yesterday confessed to police that they robbed the James Roosevelt home in Georgetown recently and escaped with loot that included a gold wrist watch and several shirt studs.

The men were arrested while they worked on an automobile in a lot at Thirty-seventh and N streets, by Precinct Detectives M. B. Moore and H. H. Carper.

They gave their names as Francis Carter, 20, and James Dyson, 17, both of the 1200 block of Thirty-seventh street northwest.

The detectives had received information that led to the arrest.

Going to the home of the men, police recovered the gold watch and studs, which had been hidden in the plaster of the walls of a room. Several other watches, a quantity of jewelry, and miscellaneous trinkets were found.

Strange Vehicles Dazzle N. Y. As 30,000 of 40 et 8 March

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 20.—The old madmuzzell from arma-teers—that fabulous lady of 1917—got a long persisting musical salute today and tonight as the American Legion's Forty and Eight paraded for more than three hours before hundreds of thousands of pop-eyed New Yorkers.

The Forty and Eighters, whose organization was named for the capacity label on the wartime French boxcars, gamboled down Eighth avenue in a long, wavering march, most of them walking, but many riding in some of the oddest vehicles yet fashioned by human hand.

On and on rolled the parade until it seemed endless. Legion officials estimated the participants at 30,000, but it was only a warm-up for tomorrow's really big march of the whole Legion up Fifth avenue.

Things got off in a kind of Old World atmosphere, behind ten mounted policemen riding abreast.

Swinging along behind was the North Carolina delegation, its drum and bugle corps, in white pants and

Trade Pacts Aid 'Reign of Law,' Hull Declares

Text of Secretary Hull's Address—Page 9.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Sept. 20.—Predicting a disastrous war or an economic catastrophe in Europe unless nations there readjust their ways within the next two years, Secretary Hull today described the Roosevelt reciprocal trade program as a world peace maker.

While President Roosevelt, in a letter to the Boston conference on distribution, stressed proper economic distribution as a "safe-guarding" factor for world peace, the Secretary of State told the group that the world needs "a reign of law rather than unlicensed force."

At a press conference prior to his luncheon address, he said he saw nothing in the European situation today to indicate an immeditae war was likely. Even in the event of war, he asserted, he felt the United States would not become involved.

Roosevelt Seconds Plea.

Nevertheless, Hull expressed himself as far from easy over conditions abroad. He declared a hopelessly unsound economic structure was responsible for the perilous European situation and predicted it would be aggravated when millions now engaged in manufacturing armament lost that employment.

Hull urged a liberalization of trade policies and was seconded in the President's letter to the conference.

"Let it not be said of this generation," Mr. Roosevelt wrote, "that we left uncorrected a condition under which the people of one section of our country are smothered with overproduction of raw materials and goods by the people of

Franco Orders British Consuls From 3 Cities

Rebel Chieftain Threatens to Expel Them If They Do Not Obey.

By the Associated Press.

Hendaye, Franco-Spanish Frontier, Sept. 20.—Gen. Francisco Franco, leader of the Spanish rebels, tonight threatened to expel British consuls from Bilbao, Santander and San Sebastian if they do not withdraw.

The three cities are in territory now held by the rebels, whom Great Britain has failed to recognize.

Meanwhile, several hundred Asturian Marxists, having sworn to die rather than retreat, were reported tonight to have been annihilated by the insurgents along the Biscay Coast.

So savage was their defense of the villages of Villahormes and Nueva that the insurgents were reported to have been forced to concentrate all available forces in the area as well as war planes to blast the Asturians from the heights.

The rebels, delayed for weeks before the commanding town of Ribadesella on the bay, and at the Leon border south of Oviedo, rushed preparations for a concerted offensive to clear Asturias of government troops before winter sets in.

Rebels Accused.

Paris, Sept. 20 (AP).—Maj. Julian Troncoso, Spanish insurgent leader arrested in an investigation linking Gen. Franco's high command with the terrorism of France's "hooded men," was charged formally tonight with complicity in the attempted hijacking of a Spanish loyalist submarine at Brest.

Two Maryland Children, en Route to School, Struck Down by Cars; Holiday Death Toll Six

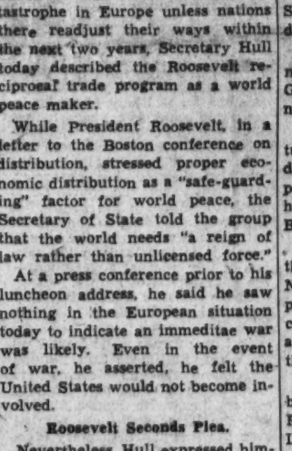
Two school children were injured, one seriously, in traffic accidents yesterday in nearby Maryland. Both accidents took place as the children were on their way to school.

The first victim was 7-year-old Ruth Glowka, of Avenel road, near Silver Spring, Md. She suffered a broken jaw, fractured legs and dislocated shoulder when hit by a car operated by Mrs. Margaret S. Jansky, 3020 Tilden street, who was not held.

The accident happened near the girl's home as she was hurrying to school. She was taken to Washington Sanitarium.

The other victim was Thomas Keeting, 9, of Moore avenue, Hyattsville. He was struck by a car operated by William D. Hill, of Hyattsville, police said. The boy is reported to have run out behind a parked truck. Hall was not held.

Meanwhile, the death toll of Sunday's accidents in the Washington area mounted to six, while more than 30 were injured.



RUTH GLOWKA.

The dead:
Mrs. Joan Darby, 34, of 2000 block of Twentieth street.
O. B. Allison, 60, of Fairfax, Va.

Ashby Quade, 52, of Oakley, Va.

Mrs. Darby died yesterday in Providence Hospital. She was injured when the automobile in which she was riding crashed against a tree after failing to make a turn in Laurel, Md.

Allison was killed when struck by a car while walking on Little River turnpike, outside Fairfax, Va. Police said the driver was James H. Thompson, 34, colored, 2200 block of Georgia avenue, who was held for investigation.

J. B. Redman was killed by a taxicab on the Lee highway near Gainsville. Police said the driver was Elwood Mercer, 22, 700 block of Hobart place here.

Marian Vass and Seabold Brown died shortly after midnight yesterday when the car in which they were riding on No. 1 highway in Arlington County plunged off the highway into Four Mile Run. Three other occupants were hurt.

Inability of Cities to Provide 10% of Cost Snags Slum Clearance Program

Plan Hindered Also by Lack Of State Acts

Local Housing Authorities Created by Only 50 Municipalities.

The Government's new $526,000,000 low-cost housing and slum clearance program ran into a serious difficulty yesterday in the inability of cities to provide the 10 per cent of the cost of projects which the Wagner act says they must contribute.

Other snags developed at Secretary Harold I. Ickes' conference of some 40 housing authorities, called to speed perliminary steps to be taken in the vast program, were:

1. Eighteen States have no laws which will permit participation in the Federal undertaking.

2. All cities except 50 have failed to create the necessary local housing authorities to administer development of projects.

Meanwhile, housing officials and authorities are awaiting appointment by President Roosevelt of the administrator to have charge of the much-heralded enterprise. Hope has been expressed that an appointment may be made today or tomorrow, before the President departs on his Western trip.

Ickes, who is backing Howard A. Gray, PWA housing chief, for the position, told conferees that housing progress had been slow under the PWA because of collusion between contractors, labor unions and builders to boost costs, and efforts of land owners to raise prices.

"All that, however, is passed," he said, "with the difficulty early encountered in finding a competent, qualified expert administrator. We now have a going concern for which no one need opologize."

Decentralization Suggested.

The conference brought a well-formed demand for a large degree of decentralization in administration of the housing law. Regional offices were called for, where local authorities could submit their plans for approval without long delay.

Delegates who asked Ickes whether they must permit the United States Housing Authority to approve sites and plans, and select architects, were told the Government's desire was for local initiation and control, subject to "reasonable review" by the Federal authority.

Widespread inability of cities to supply their 10 per cent of the cost was revealed when Ickes called on representatives of cities present to reveal what their municipalities could do. All those called on, including New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland and Chicago, were said to be over their debt limits now, with none able to provide cash for the housing projects.

New Interpretations Sought.

Discussion brought suggestions of possible interpretations of the law that would permit the municipalities to make a part of their contribution in streets and alleys made avalaible for the projects, installation of sewers, paving and other services, and the remission of taxes. Possibility of such interpretation will be discussed by counsel for various housing agencies and societies.

"Too much idealism" in low-cost housing and slum elimination projects was criticized by Andrew Eken, whose contracting firm built the Hillside and Williamstown projects in New York. He called for simple construction to increase the availability of the structures for low-income wage earners.

"Those to occupy the dwellings," he said, "should be made to accept something less than perfection. The perfect project is all right, but it can't be provided for $5 a room per month."

The basic wage-earning capacity of those for whom projects should be built was discussed, without general agreement on any figure. The construction costs are to be limited to an average of $1,000 per room, and $4,000 per unit in cities of less than 500,000 population. In the larger cities the limit is $1,250 per room.

Hollywood Scenario Writer Wouldn't Dare Concoct Melodrama Like Black Controversy.

By Franklyn Waltman

DURING the debate in the Senate over Hugo L. Black's nomination to the Supreme Court, Senator Henry F. Ashurst declared that "no scenario writer this year will produce a more delightful film or one more opulent with gentle irony than the scene we have here."

WALTMAN

At the time Arizona's humorist and exponent of inconsistency little realized the prescience and prophecy with which he spoke. He spoke in defense of the Black nomination and the point he was seeking to make was that the Senate was hard to satisfy. Ironically, it now appears the Senate was easily—much too easily—satisfied in the matter of the Black appointment.

But that is not the only ironical aspect of Mr. Black's elevation to the Supreme Court. To one as addicted to sardonic pleasure as I, it is the most delightful, gorgeous and humorous political development which it has been my joy to encounter in a dozen years of association with politicians and their activities.

Think of it! After all the pious speeches of the last eight months of the President regarding liberalization of the Supreme Court and reform of its processes, his first appointee turns out to be a Ku Kluxer! The greatest liberal of our day—the great defender of democracy—names a white-shirted klansman to pass on the civil and religious liberties of the people of this country. It is so incredible that any Hollywood scenario writer who incorporated such a theme in his script would be fired on the spot. Yet it has happened!

But that is not all. Each succeeding act in this melodrama—this tragedy, as some of the New Dealers regard it—adds to the gayety. First, we have the new member of the dignified, solemn Supreme Court barricading himself from reporters in his hotel room and then dodging from hotel to hotel to avoid inquiries, with a drunk in the street, according to the London press, meanwhile yelling imprecations at Justice Black.

Secondly, we have the President squirming uncomfortably, disavowing all knowledge of the new justice's K. K. K. activities and gruffly answering questions at his press conference—as if he were the most imposed upon man in all the world. The fact that the President fell into a hole which he had dug for someone else makes this episode funnier than that rollicking farce "You Can't Take It With You."

And, then, we have Mr. Roosevelt, according to one of his most ardent admirers among the Washington correspondents, skipping out on a trip across the country so that he will not be in Washington when Justice Black returns and claims his seat among the anointed on the Supreme Court bench.

What could be funnier than the mad scramble of Democratic Senators, who blithely refused to hear any evidence regarding Justice Black and voted his confirmation, to get out statements asserting that if they had known the appointee was a Klansman they would have voted against him?

It is deliciously funny, because the Senate's hail-fellow-well-met manner of passing on judicial appointments at last has hit it in the face. All this is in the best Senate tradition, which is to be indifferent to the duty which the Constitution imposes on it to scrutinize judicial appointments, place an okay on anyone—without knowing anything about him—satisfactory to the Administration or the Senators from whose State the nominee comes, and then criticize the jurist after he has been duly named and confirmed.

Intimations from some of these Senators that they have been imposed on, that Mr. Black's colleague—Senator John H. Bankhead—or someone else assured them that the Alabaman was not a member of the Klan, is plain bunk. In the first place, Senator Bankhead did not address the Senate until the day after Justice Black was confirmed. Though his words then might be interpreted to be a denial of Justice Black's Klan membership, Senator Bankhead avoided, and it appears studiously avoided—saying so specifically and in so many words.

Nor did anyone else tell the Senate that Justice Black was not a Klansman when that issue was raised. Senator William E. Borah came the closest to that when he said he would refuse to vote to recommit the nomination for hearings because "there has never been at any time one iota of evidence that Senator Black was a member of the Klan" and then added further on that "we know that Senator Black has said in private conversation, not since this matter came up but at other times, that he was not a member of the Klan and there is no evidence to the effect that he is."

On what conversations Senator Borah based this latter statement remains unknown. He now declines to discuss the Klan aspects of the Black appointment. We suspect he was just talking loosely, as is done in the Senate.

Anyway, that is a poor shield for the squirming Senators to hide behind for it was after Senator Borah's demand for evidence that Senator Edward R. Burke asserted that "there are two gentlemen in Washington, with one of whom I talked, and that one told me that he and the other gentleman were both members of the Klan in Birmingham, Ala., and both were present in person on the occasion of the initiation of Mr. Hugo Black into the order." Senator Royal S. Copeland gave similar testimony.

But the Senate could not be bothered by investigating what really were very serious charges and now some of its members are squirming. Let them squirm and perhaps in the future the Senate will take a little care with judicial appointments.

As for humor, listen to this speech, made in the Senate on February 19, 1930, in opposition to the confirmation of Hugh M. Tate to the Interstate Commerce Commission on the ground that he once had a slight connection as a lawyer with a railroad:

"I do not mean that, as an invariable rule, a man is so bent or has such a trend that he cannot change his method of thought, but I do mean to say that as a general rule a man follows in the future the course that he has followed in the past.

"Show me the kind of steps a man made in the sand five years ago and I will show you the kind of steps he is likely to make in the same sand five years hence. Show me the course he was pursuing then, and, unless there has been a cataclysm which has absolutely changed his character, I will show you the course he is going to follow in the future. It is merely according to the law of nature; it is written on the human heart; it is inscribed on the tablets of the external government—the government of nature."

Those remarks were uttered by Senator Hugo L. Black!

And now comes word from Paul M. Ward, Baltimore Sun London correspondent—who seems to have made a close and friendly contact there with Justice Black—that the latter was quite pleased over the New York primary election results, where his Klan activities were made an issue, and that he regards that election as a repudiation of the attack on him.

"The returns increase the likelihood that Mr. Black will not reply to the attacks even after his return to the United States," Mr. Ward cabled to his newspaper.

Could anything be more amazing than that a Supreme Court justice in a matter so deeply touching his fitness and good faith should be content to leave the issue to an election? At long last Mr. Dooley is confirmed in his theory that the Supreme Court follows the election returns.

G.O.P. May Ask Roosevelt Foes To Join Hands

Session Today May Answer Vandenberg's Plea for United Action.

On the heels of a bid Saturday by Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, for a union of his party with disaffected Democrats, Republican leaders of the country's largest cities will meet here today for a conference with National Chairman John D. M. Hamilton.

In announcing the gathering which will be followed Thursday by a meeting of the executive committee of the party, the national chairman said it is one of a series "begun in August as the first move in the Republican campaign for the 1938 Congressional elections."

As plans were going forward for the meeting, word was received here from New York, in an Associated Press dispatch, that Charles D. Hilles, 70, New Yorker member of the national committee, and its chairman from 1912 to 1916, is severing his many years' connection with the committee.

Hilles Drops Out.

"It is not my intention to assume a responsible part in the Presidential contest of 1940," Hilles wrote W. S. Murray, State chairman, asking that a successor be appointed.

Hilles told Murray that it would be "in the interest of the party to have my successor chosen at the (State) meeting Wednesday, so that his name may be presented to the National Committee a few weeks hence."

Coincidence of today's meeting with that of the executive committee and with Vandenberg's speech was felt, however, by many observers to indicate plans may be discussed for co-operation in the elections next year with Democrats who have parted company with the Roosevelt Administration on major issues.

Vandenberg Important.

Vandenberg's importance as a party leader, stressed by a movement to nominate him for the Presidency at the 1936 national convention, lent added weight to his call at Detroit Saturday for " a union of hearts and hands regardless of previous party lines" to oppose "the Roosevelt party."

Notables to Attend.

At today's meeting all cities of more than 500,000 population save New York and Buffalo will be represented. Those expected to attend are:

Leo E. Anderson, chairman Los Angeles County Republican committee; I. M. Pechkam, chairman San Francisco County Republican committee; Edward H. Moore, chairman Cook County (Chicago) Republican committee; Judge August F. Mueller, chairman Baltimore Republican City committee; Carroll L. Meins, president Republican city committee of Boston; John Breining, secretary Wayne County (Detroit) Republican committee; Fred W. Pape, chairman St. Louis Republican city committee; Rees H. Davis, chairman Cuyahoga (Cleveland) County Republican committee; Jay Cooke, president Philadelphia Republican city committee, and Frank J. Harris, chairman Allegheny County (Pittsburgh) Republican committee.

To Get Sentiment Data.

In addition to Hamilton, these will attend the executive committee meeting:

Ralph E. Williams, of Oregon; Mrs. John E. Hillman, of Colorado, and Mrs. Marjorie Scranton, of Pennsylvania, vice chairmen; national treasurer, C. B. Goodspeed, of Chicago; general counsel, Henry P. Fletcher and Robert P. Burroughs, of New Hampshire; Mrs. Paul Fitzsimons, of Rhode Island; Daniel E. Pomeroy, of New Jersey; Walter S. Hallanan, of West Virginia; J. Will Taylor, of Tennessee; Harrison E. Spangler, of Iowa; Mrs. Horace H. Sayre, of Oklahoma; R. B. Creager, of Texas; Ezra R. White, of Idaho; Earl Warren, of California.

"At this week's meeting, Hamilton will receive reports of sentiment throughout the country and will outline to the leaders the work that the National Committee is doing to aid in rebuilding the Republican organization throughout the country," the committee said.

A. W. Cutten Estate Inquiry Approved

Chicago, Sept. 20 (AP).—Administrators of the estate of Arthur W. Cutten, once reputed to be the biggest grain trader in La Salle street, intensified their efforts today to determine his true wealth at the time of his death June 24, 1936.

The probate court approved the employment of two special investigators to sift reports that Cutten's estate was far greater than the $350,000 estimate filed with his will, and that much of his holdings were in Canada under various names and symbols.

Rep. Pettengill Sees Effort to Impeach Black

Indianan 'Will Vote for It' Unless Justice Repudiates Klan.

By the United Press.

Representative Samuel B. Pettengill (Dem.) Indiana, foe of President Roosevelt's drastic reform legislation, yesterday said he would support an effort to impeach United States Supreme Court Justice Hugo L. Black unless Black disclaims membership in the Ku Klux Klan.

Pettengill said he did not know who would introduce the impeachment resolution, which can be passed in the House by majority vote, but he said he "feels sure" that such a measure will be offered.

Black Sill Is Silent.

Meantime, Black was silent on the charges that he is a life member of the hooded organization. It was reported from London, where he has been playing hide and seek with newspaper reporters, that he would make no statement until he returns to the United States. Black is due to sail from Cobh, Ireland, September 25.

Justice James C. McReynolds will return on the same boat. Justice George Sutherland returned yesterday from an European vacation but declined to discuss the Black case.

President Roosevelt, who has refused to comment on the Klan disclosure until Black has had an opportunity to read the charges in their entirety, thus will be on his Far Western trip when the former Alabama Senator returns to the Capital and when the court meets on October 4. Unless he resigns, Black is due to take his seat with the other eight justices then.

Pettengill's attack upon Black revives their feud which began when President Roosevelt's public utility "death sentence" act was before Congress. Pettengill led a crusade against the measure. Black proposed an inquiry into utility lobbying and directed an investigation which showed that one utility company spent more than $1,000,000 in advertising attacks on the bill.

Pettengill has previously announced that his Congressional career will terminate when the Seventy-fifth Congress adjourns. He will enter the practice of law instead of seeking re-election.

Matter for President—Bailey.

Morehead City, N. C., Sept. 20 (AP). Senator Bailey (Democrat), North Carolina said today charges that Justice Black as a life member of the Ku Klux Klan were "in the present stage, a matter between the President and his appointee."

John Wenchel New Counsel in Revenue Board

'Career' Man Succeeds Shafroth as Chief Lawyer at Bureau.

John Philip Wenchel, assistant Treasury general counsel and a civil service "career" employe for 23 years, yesterday was named chief counsel for the Internal Revenue Bureau, succeeding Morrison Shafroth.

Shafroth and his assistant, Russell J. Ryan, resigned from the bureau after they refused to participate in the agency's investigation of tax avoidance and evasion. The President's appointment of Wenchel was announced by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau.

The bureau's key legal office was filled, as the Treasury, Internal Revenue officials and a congressional committee co-ordinated efforts to revise and overhaul the existing tax structure when Congress next meets.

Vinson at His Office.

Representative Fred Vinson, of Kentucky, chairman of a special House tax sub-committee, returned to his office yesterday to commence preliminary conferences looking to a 1938 revenue bill, removing inequities in the existing law.

Vinson, who expects to call his sub-committee together late in October, said "I am not looking at the question from a revenue standpoint at the present time. Primarily, I want to correct injustices. We may pick up some revenue here, and lose some there."

Wenchel, a native of Baltimore, has been continuously in the classified civil service since 1914, when he became an Agriculture Department attorney. Under the merit system he rose to become assistant solicitor and special attorney of the Secretary of Agriculture. In February, he was appointed an assistant general counsel in the Treasury Department.

Shafroth resigned June 28, but announced it only last week. He said neither Ryan nor himself thought it proper "to use the Bureau of Internal Revenue as planned in the tax avoidance and evasion investigation." He said they were given the choice of participating or resigning.

Representative Hamilton Fish (Republican), of New York, said yesterday that Shafroth and Ryan were to be commended for refusing to "stultify their official positions for purposes of partisan reprisal." Fish said their resignations confirmed his charges that Republicans and anti-New Dealers were "persecuted" in the tax evasion inquiry.

Vinson Maps Inquiry.

Wenchel, who succeeds Shafroth, has been in charge of legal work in the Bureau of Customs, Procurement Division, Coast Guard, Bureau of Narcotics, Alcohol Tax Unit and Public Health Service. Morgenthau said he has handled "the legal aspects of certain administrative problems in the department, having particular reference to appropriations and problems with the General Accounting Office." Huntington Cairns, attached to the Treasury legal division, was promoted to Assistant General Counsel in charge of the opinion section.

Back in Washington yesterday, Vinson laid plans for a two-month sub-committee inquiry which will consider undistributed earnings tax revision, tax law codification and simplification, review existing excise taxes and probably hold hearings on the eight States permitting community property income tax returns.

Vinson said he is interested in making Federal personnel subject to State taxation and State employes subject to Federal levies, "but we don't intend to tackle anything we can't finish." He said he is satisfied in a general way with the operation of the undivided profits tax, but wants to provide relief for deficit corporations and corporations coming out of bankruptcy.

2 'Spirits' Promoted.

Tokyo, Sept. 20 (AP).—Emperor Hirohito has promoted the spirits of two officers killed in action in north China to be major generals. The rank was awarded posthumously to Col. Tatsuji Kuranaga and Col. Danjo Ohbu.

Binghamton Leads Cities in Housing, Survey Discloses

By the Associated Press.

Dr. Paul M. Pearson, assistant director of the PWA housing division, rated Binghamton, N. Y., yesterday as having the best general housing conditions among 64 cities surveyed by the Commerce Department.

The survey was made and published in 1935, and Dr. Pearson made his findings on a recapitulation of the relative standings of the various cities on the basis of their electrical and sanitary conveniences.

Dr. Pearson said he rated Binghamton first because its housing conditions, compared with the relative conditions in the other 63 cities, showed the best average.

Binghamton had the fewest units renting for less than $15 a month; the fewest in need of major repairs, and the fewest unfit for habitation.

Ranking behind Binghamton in the order determined by Dr. Pearson's compilation were:

Burlington, Vt.; Portland, Me.; Reno, Nevd; Erie, Pa.; Syracuse, N. Y.; San Diego, Calif.; Hagerstown, Md.; Waterbury, Conn.; Worcester., Mass.; Nashua, N. H.; Williamsport, Pa.; Trenton, N. J.; Lincoln, Nebr., and Providence, R. I.

1937 Turkey Supply 10% Below Year Ago

By the Associated Press.

Turkeys for Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners will not be as plentiful this year as last, Federal economists reported yesterday.

They estimated the 1937 supply is about 10 per cent below last year's. Growers intend to market their birds earlier and at slightly heavier weights than in 1936, the economists said.

Broken Spectacles in Brinkley Case Disappear

Friends Insist Missing Man Was Murdered

Arlington Police, However, Claim Contractor Voluntarily Disappeared.

By Eugene Warner.

Where is Arthur G. Brinkley?

Mystery as impenetrable as the best fiction plots surrounds the disappearance of the quiet, hard-working contractor, who vanished a week ago tomorrow.

The known facts are numerous. Yet they conflict in a way which has baffled investigators. Arlington County police have given up—dismissed the case as a voluntary disappearance.

But the man's family, business acquaintances and employes—the last persons to see him are convinced he was murdered. There is evidence to support both theories.

Many heertofore unrevealed facts were brought to light yesterday. On the floor of Brinkley's car, found on Kirkwood road, Arlington, last Wednesday, were his broken spectacles. Yesterday the spectacles had vanished. Sheriff A. W. Fields said "They're gone. We haven't got them."

It also was learned that across the road from the parked car, a 1933 Oldsmobile, a freshly packed and wrapped workingman's lunch of two sandwiches and a cube of yellow pound cake was found by Gorman Brinkley, the missing man's son. Young Brinkley also found a heavy automobile wrench in the grass near the car. The sheriff has dismissed each clew.

Owed Considerable Money.

"This man owed considerable money," the sheriff said yesterday. "We've checked and found he owed around $600. He cashed a check for $282 in the Arlington Trust Co. He was supposed to pay Dickey & Co., building materials supply house, $150 out of that check. Dickey's is only a few feet from the bank. He didn't go up there and pay the $150. That, to me, is very significant."

Gorman Brinkley, the son, however, pointed out that $600 was ordinary indebtedness for a contractor. "Father," he said, "in the very nature of his business was always ordering supplies in large quantities. The $600 was practically nothing. He paid all his bills regularly and had more work ahead of him than he could handle. He was not worried about money."

Dickey & Co. verified the son's statement. Brinkley had always paid on time in the past, a company official said. He had purchased nearly $2,000 worth of materials from the firm and owed $387.50 for materials in the past month. As far as lack of work was concerned, that was out of the question, the spokesman said.

Considered Excellent Contractor.

"Brinkley was one of the best plastering contractors in Virginia," it was said. "He could get all the jobs he wanted to undertake. He always had paid his bills on time. In fact he paid them early and got a discount for doing so."

George W. Smith, a young plasterer working for Brinkley, said his employer was in fine spirits the morning he disappeared. William R. Ottey, head plasterer, confirmed Smith's statement, as did other plasterers and laborers on a new house Brinkley had a contract to plaster at Fifteenth and Utah streets, Arlington.

"He told me just what to do the rest of the day," Ottey said. "And he outlined his plans for the next day. He was joking and kidding with us. There was absolutely nothing wrong with his frame of mind that day. He was feeling good.

"Knowing him the way I do, I'm sure he was killed. Someone saw him cash that check and followed him in a car and forced him into a side road and held him up. The broken glasses on the floor show there was trouble, because Brinkley couldn't see without them. I remember once he took off his glasses and almost fell off a scaffold. He would have fallen if I hadn't grabbed him. He started to walk right off the scaffold."

Emergency Brake On.

Smith, first person to reach the car, about a half mile from the plastering job, revealed that the emergency brake was on, though the automobile was on a level road. Regarding this, young Brinkley said:

"My father had a very unusual habit of putting the car in gear when he stopped, rather than pulling the emergency. He always did it. In fact, he got me into the habit of doing it, too. I don't know why he did it, but I never saw him put on the emergency brake, unless he was on a hill, as long as I've been driving with him."

The son was particularly intrigued by the lunch he found near the car.

"I showed the lunch to some of the plasterers and they all said, 'Sure, that's a typical workman's lunch, a laborer's lunch.' Now this event occurred between 10 and 10:30 a. m. Why wold a workman throw away his lunch before the lunch hour? It was fresh lunch, packed that day. Whoever threw that lunch there probably knows something about this."

Considers Wrench a Clew.

"It seems to me the wrench was a clew, too. The wrench was in the grass back of the car. It was somewhat greasy and seemed to me to be covered with fingerprints. I took it and the lunch to the sheriff's office, but they didn't pay any attention to them. They were already convinced father had walked off of his own accord."

Detective Hugh Jones and Harry L. Woodyard, who investigated the case, placed the glasses in Brinkley's cap and stuffed them into a side pocket of the car. The car was parked overnight, the doors open, outside the Arlington Jail. Next morning when the sheriff asked for the spectacles, it was learned they were missing. They had been taken from the side pocket. The golf cap was still there. An important piece of evidence was gone. Where?

The theory that Brinkley might have vanished because of family troubles was refuted by the son.

Aunt Identifies Boy Abandoned In WPA Office

Police Summon Father to Explain Action in Deserting Son.

By the Associated Press.

Providence, R. I., Sept. 20.—A chubby faced boy whose father abandoned him in WPA headquarters was identified tonight as 3-year-old Giosuele Ricci, son of a former WPA worker who has been unemployed for three weeks.

Identification was made by the boy's aunt, Mrs. Adeline Grimaldi, who recognized pictures in newspapers. The boy was turned over to her, and the father, Antonio Ricci, 39, ordered to report to police headquarters to explain his action.

An official at the WPA office told police a man shoved the youngster through a window, into his arms, and shouted: "I've taken care of him long enough; now you take care of him."

Throughout the day pleas, threats, bribes, even clowning antics by police failed to elicit a single word from the black-eyed boy. When his aunt appeared at the home where he had been placed, however, he burst into a flood of Italian.

Mrs. Grimaldi told police that she and her husband, John, live in the same house with Mr. and Mrs. Ricci and the boy. Both men, she said, were employed on WPA projects. Three weeks ago, she said, an investigator reported two men at the same address on WPA pay rolls, and Ricci was discharged.

Since that time, she said, Ricci brooded over his unemployment.

Woman Who Left Baby Girl Is Located

Chicago, Sept. 20 (AP).—A young mother accused of abandoning her 2-week-old baby girl in a cemetery was located today through a search of birth records. Assistant State's Attorney John Boyle identified the mother as Mrs. Blanche Cassello, 21, a WPA clerk. She told him, he said, her estranged husband persuaded her to leave the child in a graveyard in suburban Hillside because "I'd be unable to support it." Boyle said he had not yet decided what action he would take in the case.

Borah Also Calls U. S. Constitution Laymen's Charter

Chicago, Sept. 20 (AP).—Senator William E. Borah (Republican), Idaho, agreed today with President Roosevelt's description of the Constitution as a "laymen's charter."

"It is indeed a laymen's charter," Borah said while resting at a hotel between trains en route to his Boise, Idaho, home from the capital. "Laymen made it and only laymen can unmake it."

Borah had little comment on current affairs at the Capital. He said there was "very little being said in Washington" about a special session.

His only comment on the appointment of Associate Justice Hugo L. Black was a reiteration of his stand that Black was "not in fact a justice," because of legal technicalities.

Asked about the President's impending Westward trip, Borah said: "I am very glad he is going. I want him to see that great Northwest as often as he can. It is the home of real democracy in this country."

Emergency Council Ends December 31

President Roosevelt abolished the National Emergency Council yesterday, effective next December 31.

The council's records, equipment and property will be transferred to the Budget Bureau, under the President's order.

The council was created by Mr. unit, the Industrial Emergency subsequently merged with another Roosevelt in November, 1933, and Council.

Its functions were described as providing "for the orderly presentation of business to the President," co-ordination of the work of Federal agencies at the Capital and in the field and to serve in an advisory capacity to the President.

AAA Proposes Crop Cut of 30 Million Acres

Plan Dovetails With Ever-Normal Granary; New Law Needed.

nounced that State AAA committeemen will meet with farm leaders of Southern State in Memphis October 1 to discuss needed farm steps.

Joining with Wallace yesterday in announcing the 1938 soil conservation program, H. R. Tolley, AAA administrator, said the new acreage goals established "more definite objectives" and "should increase the program's efficiency by more directly encouraging better balanced farming."

Only one type of benefit payment will be made, and a maximum payment will be established for each farm. If the individual soil depleting crop goal is exceeded by a farmer, or there is failure to reach the soil-building goal, payments will be less.

Tolley said the new program will prove "simpler and more effective" than the two which preceded it, and the farmer "will know just what he is supposed to do to comply with the plan and just how much he will receive for that compliance."

Rates of payment are determined by a uniform formula, with one-half the payment based upon the conservation attained by reaching the goals and one-half on the sacrifice involved.

Crops Classified.

The program classes most major crops, such as cotton, wheat, corn, other grains, tobacco, fruit and vegetables as "soil-depleting" and attempts to hold down acreage by establishing National, State, county and individual limits. Grass and clover are classed as "soil conserving and soil building" crops, and their planting encouraged. Special payments will be made to encourage transfer of certain Great Plains farms back to grass, and tenants and share-croppers on certain cotton lands in the South will receive larger benefits.

Crop	Goal (In Thousands)	1928-37 (In Thousands)	Average
Corn	92,000-	96,000	102,468
Cotton ...	29,000-	31,000	36,858
Rice	825-	875	900
Tobacco	1,575-	1,650	1,650
Peanuts ..	1,500-	1,600	1,544
Potatoes	3,100-	3,300	3,346
General ...	145,000-	155,000	157,480

Kidnaped Wife Dead, Parsons Tells Newsmen

3 Mysterious Letters Since Her Disappearance Substantiate Belief.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 20.—A new chapter was written today to one of Long Island's most baffling mysteries when William H. Parsons, whose wife disappeared June 9, from the Parsons' Stony Brook, Long Island, farm, formally announced he believed her dead.

In a prepared statement read to newsmen by attorney Isaac H. Levy, at the office of the law firm representing Parsons, the society squab farmer said:

"I am satisfied from the letters I have received that my wife is no more. The writer of these letters seems very anxious to relieve my distress. It is a cruel thing to keep me in suspense.

"What has occurred has done much to wreck my life and I find it absolutely necessary to leave the scene of this sad tragedy. I am preparing to dispose of my home in Stony Brook and I plan to find activity in some other part of the country. I shall, however, not give up hope that the persons who have knowledge of where my wife's body may be found will give me the little comfort of being permitted to give my wife proper burial."

Parsons declined to discuss the case except through his attorney, who relayed questions from newsmen to him.

Mrs. Parsons left her Stony Brook home in an automobile with two strangers on the morning of June 9, according to the story told police by Mrs. Anna Kupryanova, housekeeper companion in the Parsons household. She has not been seen since. A note demanding $25,000 for her return within 24 hours was found later in the Parsons car parked at the rear of the house.

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

Fishing for a Trick.

One of the smartest bridge players of my acquaintance recently delivered himself of the following philosophy: "Defending a hand is just like fishing—the main thing about both is that you have to know where to go for the fish." He was quite right, of course. In Bridge the essence of shrewd defense is to pick the suit, or suits, from which the necessary tricks can be snaffled. The defense of the hand below was simply a case of expert fishing.

N-S 30 part-score.

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
Pass	1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠
Pass	4 ♠	Pass	Pass
Pass

West opened the deuce of hearts. East won with the Queen and cashed the King, but then abandoned the heart suit and shifted to the six of diamonds. Declarer ducked and West's Queen won. It looked to West as though his partner might well have led a singleton diamond. He, therefore, cashed the Ace, hoping to give East a ruff. When East followed to the second diamond, it became apparent that declarer could overruff the diamond continuation.

With that discovered, a great many defenders in West's position would hastily abandon any thought of a third lead of diamonds, but this particular West did not act so hastily. East had shown up with the Ace, King and Queen of hearts (there would be absolutely no point in declarer's holding up the Ace of hearts for more than one round, if he had held it), and yet had passed originally. Surely East could not have the King of clubs to boot. Also, East by his deliberate failure to play three rounds of hearts had clearly conveyed the message that the third round would not "live"—in other words, that East had been able to count, from West's lead of the deuce, that the declarer would fail to the third round. Since the fifth and setting trick was not available in any side suit and since West could see that his spade Queen was in great jeopardy, there was only one chance. That was to find East with a spade that could force an honor from declarer and thus promote West's spade Queen.

On this correct analysis, West returned a third diamond, praying that his partner would read the situation and, if he held, the high spade, sacrifice it to the cause. East, having nothing to lose by the play of the spade nine instead of the lowly deuce, co-operated nobly, and declarer found himself automatically set one trick.

Morgenthau and British Expert Begin Parleys on Money Plans will be only in passing, it was reported.

Under the Tripartite Monetary Agreement of last September this Government joined with Great Britain and France in an unspecified undertaking to use the stabilization funds of the three nations to give stability to foreign exchange among them and to stamp out speculative movements.

French Have Trouble.

This agreement, hailed at the time it was consummated as a momentous forward step toward stabilization of international currencies and bringing order into world economic affairs, has survived now almost for one year, despite the financial difficulties of France during that period.

The French continue to have financial difficulties and the franc is still losing value. Forced to borrow 2,200,000,000 francs to cover its end of August requirements, the French government is finding it increasingly difficult to support the franc.

That the French situation and its effect on the tripartite agreement will receive detailed consideration in the conversations between Sir Frederick and Secretary Morgenthau became evident with the revelation that William W. Butterworth, jr., of the American Embassy in London, and H. Merle Cochran, of the American Embassy in Paris, are now in Washington.

Butterworth and Cochran are the Treasury representatives in London and Paris, respectively, and they have handled the European ends of the Tripartite Agreement undertakings. Butterworth yesterday sat in on the conference between Secretary Morgenthau and Sir Frederick, as also did Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Wayne C. Taylor, V. A. L. Mallett, counselor of the British Embassy here, and E. N. Trentham, financial counselor of that embassy.

Future Policy Discussed.

As for the discussions of the American gold policy, these are expected to consist chiefly of questions by Sir Frederick as to future American intentions, such as whether the Treasury will continue to sterilize gold imports; whether in the near future it will again release some of its sterilized gold hoard—as was done a week ago—and whether this Government contemplates any change in the price.

The meeting yesterday between the American and British treasury officials took place on the heels of a statement by British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden voicing a hope that an Anglo-American reciprocal trade agreement would soon be concluded. Such an undertaking would create customs problems for both nations—problems with which Secretary Morgenthau and Sir Frederick would be required to deal. Such an agreement, if effective, also would bring about changes in the monetary relationship of the two countries.

Secretary Morgenthau indicated yesterday that he had not discussed extension of the London silver agreement with Sir Frederick—or with anyone else recently. But this is a subject of mutual interest and it is expected to be reached before the conferences end.

Under the London silver agreement—the only tangible result achieved at the abortive London monetary and economic conference in 1933—this country agreeed for four years to buy some 24,000,000 ounces of newly mined domestic silver annually. Great Britain and other nations made similar commitments.

The United States has more than fulfilled its obligations under this agreement. It is pursuant to that undertaking that the Treasury pays a premium—77.5 cents an ounce—for newly mined domestic silver, buying the entire output in this country. The agreement expires on December 31. Secretary Morgenthau made it clear yesterday that even if the agreement is not extended, this Government, had the power, through Presidential proclamation, to continue buying all newly mined domestic silver. But, he said, no decision as to that had been reached.

Air Destruction Of China Capital Held Improbable

By the Associated Press.

Aerial combat strategists of the War Department believe the Japanese may be due for disappointing surprises in today's attempt to bomb Nanking off the map.

They do not discount the likelihood of frightful slaughter among Chinese civilians. Density of population makes it almost impossible to drop a rock without hitting someone.

The big surprise, they indicate, may be the ineffectiveness of even such massed power as 200 to 300 war planes when it comes to material destruction.

Twice in the last few days, and a dozen times all told, the Japanese have executed bombing operations against Nanking with comparatively little physical damage to the seat of Chinese government.

Japan's bland announcement of tomorrow's intended holocaust and advance warning to foreign nationals and noncombatants to evacuate led observers here to expect a concentrated attack on government buildings, railroads, boat canals, ship docks and Gen. Chiang Kai-shek's military air base.

Mellon Bequeaths Bulk of Estate to Charity Trust

Son, Daughter Get Furnishings From Mansion

Received Earlier Gifts; Personal Employes Left $180,000.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 20.—Andrew W. Mellon's will was filed today and left his millions to charity with only two exceptions.

The household furnishings in the Mellon mansion in Woodland Road were left to his son, Paul, and his daughter, Ailsa—Mrs. David K. E. Bruce.

The rest of the vast fortune, estimated between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000, was bequeathed to the A. W. Mellon Educational and Charitable Trust.

No Estimate of Estate's Value.

No estimate of its value was made by the three executors, Paul Mellon, David K. E. Bruce, the son-in-law, and Donald D. Shepard, Mellon's personal attorney.

While the bulk of the estate was directed to the educational and charitable trust, the state's tax experts said Pennsylvania would collect up to 10 per cent of the fortune. The percentage, they explained, would be collected through the state's transfer inheritance tax, which does not exempt charitable bequests.

In Washington, Treasury officials said they would examine the activities of the trust to determine whether it is subject to Federal taxes. If it is determined the trust is engaged only in charitable activities no Federal estate levy will be made.

Previous Gifts to Children.

Mellon, in the will dated July 2, 1936, stated:

"I have from time to time made gifts to my children and their families and therefore I deem they have been adequately provided for. It is on this account that I make in this will no bequest to my children and their families."

Attorney Shepard announced that Mellon had given all his works of art, now estimated by experts at $50,000,000, for exhibition in the National Gallery of Art. In addition, he gave $10,000,000 for construction of the gallery in Washington.

The financier left $50,000 for employes in his residences in Pittsburgh and Washington and $100,000 for personal employes in business, but provided the executors could increase these amounts by 20 per cent. Shepard said this additional $30,000 would be added.

First Day School Enrollment In D.C. 1,000 Under Year Ago

Increase in Number of Nonresident Pupils Slight Despite Lois Kemp Ruling; Two Grades Meet in One Room at Shepherd.

About 85,000 children filed back into school buildings yesterday with as little of the much-talked-of reluctance as usual. Summer vacation was over, true, but even vacation begins to pall after three months.

And if the children were at least open-minded about the prospect of resuming their education, thousands of mothers could have whooped with joy at the thought of getting them out of the house for a while.

Incomplete returns indicated that the number of students was about 1,000 less than on opening day last year. According to Robert L. Haycock, first assistant superintendent, this decrease probably is to be accounted for by the unusually large number of families which have not yet returned from vacation trips.

Big surprise of the day was the fact that the Lois Kemp decision, forcing schools to accept nonresident pupils, resulted in no appreciable increase of boys and girls from nearby Maryland and Virginia. Only Takoma School reported an increase in nonresident enrollment.

Shepherd School, at Fourteenth and Kalmia streets, is the only building which was overcrowded seriously, with the second and the third grades meeting in one room. Haycock expects this problem will be solved by having one grade meet from 9 to 12:30 and the other from 1 to 4:30.

Many of the buildings remained open last night for the first session of night school. Approximately 10,000 registered for these classes.

An addition to the Young School for colored children in the northeast section was the only new building opened yesterday. Crippled children who last year attended Weightman and Magruder Schools were moved to Langdon School, for white pupils, and the Anthony Bowen School for colored pupils. Weightman and Magruder have been declared unsafe.

Curriculum changes included the introduction of vocational classes as an experiment in some schools. Buildings whose capacity has been reduced include Grant and Force Schools, where the third stories are closed for lack of fire escapes, and Wilson Teachers' College, which has lost the use of an attic room for the same reason.

Roosevelt's Son Signs at U. of Va., Moves to Cottage

Charlottesville, Va., Sept. 20. (AP)—Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., registered today for a three-year course in the law school at the University of Virginia.

Roosevelt and his bride, formerly Miss Ethel du Pont, arrived in Charlottesville over the week-end and moved into the home they have leased on Fendall avenue near the university. They recently returned from a honeymoon abroad.

Interior decorators have been engaged at the home, a two-story colonial cottage, for a week or more getting it ready for occupancy by the president's son and daughter-in-law.

The Roosevelts' new home formerly was occupied by another young couple, Mr. and Mrs. Lyon Polk, Jr., of New York, who had it for three school sessions. Polk graduated from the university last June.

Hoffman's Libel Suit With Carter Settled

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 20 (AP).—Counsel for Gov. Harold G. Hoffman announced tonight friendly settlement of the Governor's pending $100,000 libel suit against Boake Carter, Philadelphia radio commentator, and several broadcasting companies.

Hoffman has granted "general releases to all parties involved," following an exchange of conciliatory letters with Carter, it was announced. The Governor had charged Carter's broadcast remarks concerning the Bruno Richard Hauptmann case caused him to "suffer scorn and ridicule."

$500,000 Stock Fraud Exposed; 400 Victimized

Jersey Firm Operated 5 Years; Had 'Sucker List' of 50,000 Names.

Newark, N. J., Sept. 20.—A raid on offices of the Paine Statistical Corporation today uncovered evidence of a $500,000 swindle among 400 investors, police said, and resulted in warrants for the arrest of J. Overton Paine and five others on charges of fraud in the purchase and sale of securities.

The complaints were signed by Assistant Attorney General Andrew J. Markey, who termed the corporation a "bucket shop" with a clientele of prominent professional men, county officials and women.

Paine operated in Newark for five years, police said, and compiled a "sucker list" of 50,000 names and addresses. The 400, he said, invested an average of $1,500 each.

Others listed in Markey's complaints were identified as Lillian Ziegele, of Long Valley, recently of Paine's Chicago office; William H. Dickenhorts, of Newark, office manager; Ebner Beaumont, of Irvington, and Euplio de Marco, of Newark, salesmen, and Robert H. Pollock, of Plainfield, former office manager.

Meanwhile Vice Chancellor Alfred A. Stein today heard charges that the corporation used customers' securities to carry a margin account in its own name and now is insolvent.

Wife of Major And Lodger Die Of Gas in Home

Pair Apparently Took Own Lives While Husband Was in Hospital.

By the United Press.

Philadelphia, Sept. 20. — The bodies of the 37-year-old wife of a U. S. Army major and a man who had been lodging at the couple's home were found today in the gas-filled kitchen of the residence. Police said they apparently had committed suicide.

They were identified as Mrs. Louise J. Birmingham, wife of Maj. Richard C. Birmingham, who is stationed here, and Henry John Norman Imrie, 40, who had lived at the Birmingham home for the past four months.

Maj. Birmingham, who had been at Naval Hospital recovering from an operation, was taken to the city morgue where he identified the bodies but declined to make any comment except that Imrie had been a friend of the family for about six months.

Police said he told them that his wife and Imrie visited him at the hospital Saturday night and that he had not heard from them since. Coroner's physicians were unable to determine immediately how long Mrs. Birmingham and the lodger had been dead.

Gas Odor Detected.

Discovery of the bodies was made by a gas company employe who went to the Birmingham home after neighbors complained of a strong odor of gas. The pair were lying side by side on the kitchen floor with the gas jets of the stove open, officers said.

Imrie first was identified by his automobile operator's license. Mrs. M. F. Imrie, his mother, said at Glens Falls, N. Y., that she had not seen him since February. She said that he was married and that his wife and a 20-year-old daughter were living at Johnstonville, N. Y.

Birmingham, a major in the Infantry, came here from Fort Howard, near Baltimore. The Army Register lists his home as Minneapolis.

Writer Asks Delay Of Larceny Case

Charged with larceny after trust of $125, Mrs. Valerie MacMahon, 42, widely known authoress of children's books, was arraigned in Police Court and asked for two weeks' delay to recuperate from an automobile accident.

Police took Mrs. MacMahon into custody at her apartment, 1107 Sixteenth street northwest, Sunday on the complaint of Mrs. Jennie Irvin, of the Park Lane Apartments, who said she gave the writer the money to purchase stationery for the furtherment of a children's government project Mrs. MacMahon was sponsoring.

Mrs. MacMahon told police the stationery is being printed by a New England concern.

Tension Is Removed as Il Duce Prepares to Marshal Fleet.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Sept. 21.—A tripartite anti-piracy naval patrol, with Italy assuming full parity and authority over Mediterranean Sea lanes with Britain and France, was predicted in well informed Fascist circles tonight.

These informants said "face-saving" diplomatic procedure the past few days had paved the way for straightening out the arrangements drafted by the nine powers at Nyon—providing for Italy to have only a minor part in the patrol and which Italy rejected.

This development, rumored earlier as a possibility in view of French and British determination to prevent the piracy patrol from fanning new international hatreds, and now regarded as a virtual certainty, served to remove the tension that has prevailed since the Nyon conference was called to halt attacks on merchant ships in the Mediterranean.

Premier Mussolini and his advisers were optimistic and believed that Italy will have her warships patroling the sea in full co-operation with Britain and France as soon as technicalities concerning the number of craft to be used can be ironed out.

In London, official British quarters asserted that tension in Europe had been further eased by pleas of United States Secretary of State Cordell Hull and British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden for international co-operation.

No Major Speeches On Roosevelt Trip

Wash., where he will again board the train late the same day.

He will reach Seattle about 9:30 that night and go directly to the home of his son-in-law and daughter, Mr and Mrs. John Boettiger, where he will remain overnight and leave the morning of the 30th for Victoria aboard the destroyer.

Will Not Appear.

Except for drives about the city, the itinerary calls for no public appearances or speeches in Seattle.

From Victoria, the President will go by destroyer to Port Angeles, Wash., whence the party will motor to Lake Crescent to spend the night.

The next morning he will leave by motor and drive around the peninsula, arriving at Tacoma about 6:30 p. m.

The special train will pick up the party at Tacoma and proceed to Ephrata, Washington. Here the President will detrain and motor to Grand Coulee dam.

The route then goes by rail to Spokane where the train is due around 5:30 the afternoon of October 2. During a brief stop there the President will make a rear platform appearance.

The next stop will be Glasgow, Montana. Here the President will take another side motor trip to inspect Fort Peck Dam on the Missouri River.

At Dedication.

The President will proceed to Grand Forks, North Dakota, arriving early the morning of October 4 to dedicate a new grandstand at the fair grounds. He will then go to St. Paul where he is expected to make another appearance. He then moves on to Chicago for a two and a half hour stop the morning of October 5, during which he will dedicate the Outer River Bridge. He returns to Washington the morning of October 6.

The full two-weeks' itinerary was made public after considerable revision of an outline charted by railroad officials. The Chief Executive completed the final "tentative" arrangements upon his return to his mother's estate from a drive.

His only callers during the day were Senator Berry (Democrat), Tennessee, who was said to have discussed State matters, and J. Llonberger Davis, St. Louis banker, who was in the President's class at Harvard.

The President's special train will be composed of his own private car, six compartment cars, a club car, a diner, and a combination baggage-coach car.

Sixty persons thus far have been listed to go, including a score of newspapermen. Mrs. Roosevelt will accompany the President.

So far, officials said, no plans have been made to attach amplifying equipment on the rear of the President's car.

Gen. Beaumont, Native of D. C., Assumes Command in Shanghai

Veteran of China Service Relieves Col. Price as Marines' Chief.

When the Sixth Marine Regiment arrived at Shanghai, China, Sunday, Brig. Gen. John C. Beaumont, U. S. M. C., a native of Washington, became commander of the United States forces there.

He took over the general duties of the station from Col. Charles F. B. Price, U. S. M. C., who will continue to command the Fourth Marine Regiment, which has been on duty in the city since before the hostilities began.

Meanwhile, it was learned at the War Department that Maj. Harry I. T. Creswell, of San Francisco, has sailed for Tokyo, where he will serve temporarily as assistant to Lieut. Col. William C. Crane, military attache at the American Embassy there.

Originally Maj. Creswell was to have replaced Col. Crane, who has completed the usual four-year term of duty. War Department officials emphasized yesterday that Col. Crane will be assigned to another station when Maj. Creswell has become thoroughly familiar with his new duties.

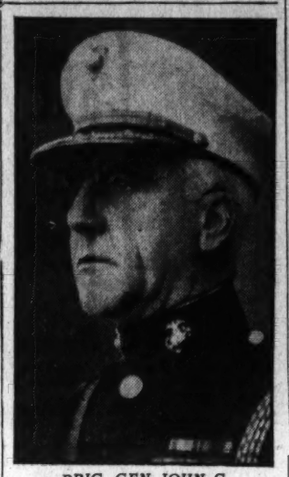
Veteran in China.

Several junior Army officers have recently been assigned to the American Embassy in Tokyo as language students.

Gen. Baumont—"Johnny Beau," as he is known among Marines—returned to Shanghai just a little more than a year after he relinquished command of the Fourth Marines to Col. Price. He is a veteran of China service and has served in many remote corners of the world.

He will be assisted in keeping United States officials informed of the course of events in Asia by the American military attache's office in Tokyo, which is responsible for "covering" for the War Department the undeclared war between China and Japan. The officers of the military attache's office report regularly on the tactical and strategic aspects of the campaign from information gathered in the capitals.

At the American Embassy in Pieping the American military attache is Col. Joseph E. Stillwell, of Yonkers, N. Y., who also has a staff of language officers.



BRIG. GEN JOHN C. BEAUMONT, U. S. M. C.

3 Washington Aides.

Three other Washington officers are serving under Gen. Beaumont in Shanghai. They are Lieut. Col. Alphonse DeCarre, U. S. M. C., commander of the First Battalion of the reinforcements, who served until last May as press relations and historical officer at Marine Headquarters; First Lieut. Samuel F. Zeiler, U. S. M. C., and Second Lieut. Richard Rothwell.

Gen. Beaumont is one of the most accomplished linguists in the Marine Corps. He speaks English, French, German and Spanish with fluency.

"He is probably as hard-boiled and as strict a disciplinarian as there is in the Marine Corps," is the way one fellow officer describes him.

Col. Price, who with his wife, the former Dolly Cunningham, is well known here, served with distinction during the service of the marines in Nicaragua. He also has served in Cuba, Panama and Mexico. During the World War Col. Price served in France with the Marine Corps. He, too, is an accomplished linguist.

United States to participate, as it had done in the Sino-Japanese crisis over Manchuria in 1933, the State Department made public its reply of acceptance.

Accordingly, Leland Harrison, Minister to Switzerland, will attend the meeting of the committee at Geneva today, but only in a consultative, nonvoting capacity. The State Department's announcement said the American Minister would act "in the same capacity and for the same purposes" as those followed by Hugh R. Wilson, then Minister to Switzerland, in the 1933 controversy.

Earlier in the day, Moore had made it plain that the United States was not abandoning its embassy or representation at Nanking when American Ambassador Nelson T. Johnson and his staff boarded the gunboat Luzon for the period of the threatened bombardment of the Chinese capital. The Luzon will remain in the vicinity of Nanking, the Acting Secretary said, explaining that the Ambassador some time ago had been authorized to take whatever steps he considered necessary for the safety of the embassy staff.

Harrison Replies.

"I am instructed by my government to inform you that I have been authorized to attend the meeting of the advisory committee summoned for Tuesday, September 21 in the same capacity and for the same purposes as those in and for which Mr. Hugh Wilson previously attended, which were indicated in a communication from Mr. Wilson to Sir Eric Drummond dated March 13, 1933. * * *

In the understanding of the American Government, the advisory committee was created to aid the members of the League in concerting their action and their attitude among themselves and with non-member states for the carrying out of a policy recommended by the League. At present, until the American Government is informed regarding the functions which the League will expect the committee to perform, it is impossible for the American Government to say to what extent it will be able effectively to cooperate. * * *

States U. S. Position.

"The American Government feels constrained to observe that it cannot take upon itself those responsibilities which devolve from the fact of their membership upon members of the League. * * * The American Government, believing thoroughly in the principle of collaboration among states of the world seeking to bring about peaceful solutions of international conflicts, will be prepared to give careful consideration to definite proposals which the League may address to it but will not, however, be prepared to state its position in regard to policies or plans submitted to it in terms of hypothetical inquiry."

The advisory committee is to consider China's request that the League covenant be invoked against Japan as the aggressor in the present conflict.

At the time Wilson was designated for the 1933 participation, the State Department said of his nonvoting, consultative status:

"This procedure . . . will not give to the representative of this Government a position of membership on the committee. Presence of the United States in this manner . . . will give an informative contact. It does not in any way impair the right of independence of judgment and freedom of action of the United States. The representative of the United States cannot take any action binding this country."

Another development yesterday was a statement by Senator Gerald Nye (Republican), North Dakota, declaring "it is not surprising that resentment increases over the tent of the neutrality law."

Addressing six organizations campaigning for application of the neutrality act in the present clash he added:

"It is definitely time that the President moved emphatically to maintain American neutrality by getting out of the position once occupied so hopefully by President Wilson when he was prevailed upon to believe that we could have a war boom continuation and neutrality both."

In this connection it was said at the State Department yesterday that "very little" mail had come in from business organizations urging a firmer stand for protection of American business interests in China.

Making the grade

Every thoughtful mother recognizes this fact . . . mothers know too that children need help to build and maintain blood strength.

Particularly is this true with those who have suffered some illness or who look pale . . . tire easily . . . are underweight . . . or have lost their zest for food.

S.S.S. Tonic helps build Sturdy Health

● S.S.S. Tonic is especially designed to build-up children's health through the red-blood-cells, thus putting them in better condition to enjoy the food they eat and to regain lost weight . . . all which make for greater strength and vitality.

Full directions are on each bottle of S.S.S. Tonic, which comes in two convenient sizes. The larger size at a saving in price.

Help your child to "make the grade" by starting him or her on a course of S.S.S. Tonic now. There is no substitute for this time-tested remedy and no ethical druggist will suggest something "just as good."

2,317 Stricken In Epidemic, 30 Per Cent Die

U. S. Surgeon General Told That Few Whites Are Afflicted.

With a total of 2,317 cases of cholera in China and a death rate from the disease of over 30 per cent, Surgenon Gen. Thomas Parran yesterday announced that Shanghai's cholera plague "now is officially considered of epidemic proportions." There is no danger of the disease spreading to this country, he added.

He has received reports of 431 cases between August 28 and September 11 in Shanghai alone. Total number of deaths there has not been reported but is estimated to be between 125 and 175. Hardest hit of the Chinese cities is Hongkong, with 1,379 cases and 479 deaths reported between July 31 and September 11.

For the period ended September 11, Macao had 365 cases and 166 deaths, and Canton, 142 cases and 25 deaths. A total of 670 had died from the disease when Dr. Parran received his last report. Very few white persons have been afflicted so far, principally, it is believed, because they are careful about boiling their drinking water and avoiding uncooked vegetables.

There is no basis whatsoever for talk of an imminent cholera plague on the West Coast of this country, according to Public Health Service officials. Any cases of the disease on vessels bound here from China would be detected either at Manila or Honolulu, since the maximum incubation period for the disease is only five days.

If cholera should be discovered, the entire ship would be placed in quarantine, it was explained. Even plane passengers stricken with the disease would show symptoms before reaching Honolulu.

Trade Pacts Aid Peace, Hull Says

The Secretary of State verbally deplored as "shortsighted" the erection of tariff barriers and other restrictions on international trade and described in considerable detail provisions of 16 reciprocal trade compacts already arranged. He added:

"We plan to go on with the program with cumulative effect. . . . The pacts themselves through their general provisions form a valuable contribution to the international law governing commercial relations. As their number grows, they will furnish a sounder basis for international relations generally, and international trade will increasingly move along the channels of mutual and natural advantage and will expand in volume. . . .

"Today, the economy of great parts of the world is upon a war basis rather than upon a sound economic basis. Economic nationalism and economic isolation, when carried to their logical end, require complete control of production and prices, regimentation and dictatorship. . . . These are conditions that breed the fear of war that haunts the world, and that breed the spirit of war that threatens all we hold dear."

Labor Board Criticized.

The conference, presided over by James Roosevelt, eldest son and secretary to the President, heard the Administration's labor policies criticized by Paul H. Nystrom, professor of marketing at Columbia University.

The National Labor Relations Board, as presently constituted, he said, "is both the prosecutor and the judge of labor practices of an employer."

"There have been instances," he added, "in which the examiners for the board have admitted material as testimony in order to favor labor's side—testimony of such questionable quality that it would have been rejected by any reputable court. Cross-examination and counter evidence by employers have been prohibited."

G. E. Juan (left), feels so strongly about the part played by Dr. F. Lamson-Scribner in the promotion of modern agriculture in the Philippines that yesterday he presented the 86-year-old scientist with a written appreciation. He was accompanied by C. T. Elba, of the office of the Philippine commissioner (right).

city. Most of them are attached to the University Hospital, which is crowded with war wounded.

Thousands of Chinese civilians were fleeing the capital, which is about 165 miles west of Shanghai and which had a population of about 800,000 when the war started, but the Chinese government announced that it would remain and that Nanking would be defended to the last.

The foreign office announced that the British and Soviet embassies had notified Foreign Minister Wang Chung-hui of their intention to remain in the capital and that the French, German and Italian embassies were remaining pending instructions from their governments.

Peiping, Sept. 20 (AP).—Japanese troops in tanks and armored trains advanced tonight to within 15 miles of Paotingfu, important Chinese stronghold in North China. Filipinos Send Thanks to Man Who Aided Them 35 Years Ago

G. E. Juan, graduate of South Dakota State College, Kansas State College and a student at Ohio State University, came yesterday to the office of Dr. F. Lamson-Scribner to express what he believes to be the sentiment of tens of thousands of farmers in the Philippine Islands.

As their first director of agriculture, Dr. Lamson-Scribner, now 86 years old, introduced into the islands modern methods of soil tilling and crop harvesting more than 35 years ago.

Juan handed Dr. Lamson-Scribner a testimonial of the efficacy of his teachings. Written in his own hand, it said:

"The Filipino farmers owe you a debt of gratitude."

Juan said his action was entirely personal.

He comes from the rich province of Zamboles, which, along with the other Philippine provinces, got a new agricultural birth when Dr. Lamson-Scribner was sent "out East" in the empire-building days.

"I would like to go back and see what the fields of the Philippines look like now," said he.

"I have never forgotten the Philippines, but I had thought they had forgotten me. I am deeply touched."

Dr. Lamson-Scribner was responsible for the establishment of experimental stations throughout the islands.

He was widely known as an educator before he joined the Department of Agriculture in 1885. He became chief of the division of agrostology in the Department of Agriculture, and in 1901 was named the first chief of the Insular Bureau of Agriculture in the Philippines.

Here he taught the modern methods of growing rice, tobacco, sugar, and cotton, and other crops for which the Islands now are famous.

He returned to the United States several years later, and then was placed in charge of all exhibits at fairs and expositions staged by the Department.

In 1922 the Secretary of State appointed him director of the exhibits of the United States at Rio de Janeiro. He was an advisory member of the Science Planning Commission of the Chicago Century of Progress exposition in 1933.

Dr. Lamson-Scribner is the author of many volumes on scientific agriculture.

"We are grateful," said Juan yesterday.

"And I am grateful and touched," responded Dr. Lamson-Scribner.

charges that they are intervening in the Spanish civil war.

Of four non-permanent council seats, two were filled. Peru succeeded Chile on expiration of the latter's three-year term, and Iran succeeded Turkey. Poland's seat was not voted this term and Spain's successor was not determined. Major powers hold permanent seats.

Eden inferentially held Italy, who with Germany, declined to attend the nine-power Nyon conference to rid the Mediterranean of piracy, to blame for the small areas offered her to patrol. Italy has demanded patrol parity with France and Great Britain.

"It was quite impossible to have attempted an elaborate plan in negotiations with a country not represented at Nyon," Eden observed.

Turning to the Sino-Japanese conflict, Eden said "it must be admitted, unhappily, that not one of several efforts made by third parties to end or assuage this conflict has been of any avail."

"Can anyone doubt," he asked, "that if cooperation had been pursued, benefit must have accrued where now there is untold suffering to millions, to say nothing of a blow to trade and prosperity throughout the Far East?"

Willful And Premeditated.

For sheer blood-curdling horror nothing that has recently happened in our mad world seems quite to equal the advance announcement by Japanese war lords of intention to blast Nanking to ruins through a gigantic air bombardment.

The capital of China is a city of more than a million inhabitants. It is the seat of a progressive government which, in the face of incredible odds, has given its country the first taste of real unity and progress it has had in decades. But only a small part of its population consists of officials.

The great majority there, as elsewhere, is composed of simple folk interested only in tending their own affairs, in keeping body and soul together by unremitting and conscientious labor. It is these humble people —fathers, mothers and children—who would be the target of the Japanese aviators. For the obvious purpose of the carefully premeditated attack is terrorization. And terrorization requires heavy civilian casualties to be effective.

It is a ghastly situation. And not the least ghastly aspect is that the world has become so numbed by an endless succession of international outrages that few voices are likely to be raised in protest. If Japan proceeds with this calculated, cold-blooded butchery she will probably remain, as far as official Washington is concerned, a "friendly" nation. "Under instructions," Nelson Johnson, our Ambassador at Nanking, has already evacuated the Embassy there. To have him stay at his post might cause us embarrassment.

It is still unbelievable that this scheduled outrage will proceed. But if it does the event should help to shake us out of our fool's paradise. The crumbling of international law, the flouting of the ethical teachings of the centuries, the senseless orgy of destruction, will not leave us unscathed. Yesterday it was Madrid. Today it is to be Nanking. Developing airplanes and deteriorating civilization form a combination in which no city, anywhere, is really safe.

It is a combination which the Japanese, too, may well consider. Today is Der Tag for them. Against their fleets of bombers China has totally inadequate defense. But the road of history has many turnings. The Japanese forget that tomorrow the shoe of destruction may be on the other foot. What they learned from the west in the way of war-making, and what they have applied with such cynical savagery, others may in time employ against them.

In the crowded cities of Japan—in Tokyo risen from the ruins of the 1923 earthquake; in beautiful Kyoto; in Nara where the sacred deer browse peacefully in the shadow of a Tang pagoda—there are also millions of unoffending folk going about their peaceful ways. They are not responsible for the arrogance of their savage rulers, for the boundless ambitions of the militarists.

But the wheel which their warlords turn will some day come full cycle. That like produces like is the law of history. Before they deliberately turn Nanking into an inferno prudence alone should warn the Japanese high command as to the hideous evil of the precedent it would now so lightly set.

Federal Expense Accounts.

The American Hotel Association is protesting vigorously against the efforts of an organization of Government officials in the Kansas City area to obtain reductions in hotel charges for traveling Federal employes. Their requests for concessions are denounced as attempts to "blackmail" hotel managements, carrying a "clear threat of official discrimination against any hotel which does not feel inclined to grant reduced rates."

Undoubtedly the practices complained of are most ill-advised and could easily lead to grave abuses. But it is questionable that the hotel representatives are placing the blame in the right quarter. As a matter of fact the offending Government officials are more sinned against than sinning. The real villain of the piece is the Federal Government itself, which follows a notoriously niggardly policy in respect to travel allowances. The maximum $5 per diem applicable to the great majority of Federal employes is seldom sufficient. The traveler is usually forced either to dip into his own pocket to supplement this inadequate provision, or else to economize in ways detrimental to health and efficiency.

This situation largely explains, although it does not justify, attempts by Federal employes to shift to the shoulders of hotel managements expenses which they find unduly burdensome. Instead of appealing to the hotels for special rates, Government organizations should demand more generous and discriminating handling of travel expense accounts. Neither the Federal employe, nor those who lodge and board him when he is away from home, should be expected to carry any part of the legitimate expenses incurred in the transaction of Government business.

Becoming More Positive.

If common sense and sober reason played an important role in the determination of present-day international relations, Secretary Hull would stand forth head and shoulders above most contemporary statesmen. His speeches are invariably notable, not merely for their warm humanitarianism but even more for their closely reasoned logic. The trouble is that the words of the Secretary of State, when contrasted with contemporary news events, are generally those of a voice crying in the wilderness.

The noble principles for which Mr. Hull stands are flouted with regularity, if not contempt, by the aggressive nations. But that is the more reason why his words should be heard with the attention which is their due in this country. And his increasing emphasis on the insecurity of America in a world dominated by unrestrained force is particularly worthy of attention here because it is not at all the note the Secretary would like to be able to stress.

In his Sunday broadcast, which was part of the international program arranged by the National Peace Conference, Mr. Hull went further than has been his custom in repudiating the panicky isolationism so largely responsible for making this country a negligible factor in the effort to preserve world peace. There was a distinct rebuff to that pernicious form of American pacifism in the Secretary's statement that "any nation which completely fails to show interest in, and to give support for, the existence of international order would lose its influence for peace."

When Mr. Hull warns that isolationism exposes us to "the flouting of even elementary rights," and couples this with a demand that we become "wholly adequate in the matter of self-defense," a more positive trend in his thinking becomes apparent. Isolation, he tells our blundering pacifists, is the road to militarization for the United States. The reason is obvious. In a lawless world the United States, to say nothing of Latin-America, would be a rich prize for the desperate nations where "life seems to have no organized end except that of war preparation." It would be criminal national folly not to recognize so plain a fact.

The Secretary of State, knowing that we are only "somewhat apart from the deep fears and hostilities" abroad today, is beginning to urge a more positive program of peace on the American people. That means, as he points out, progressive co-operation with other nations, similar in fundamental ideals, which also seek an end, and a reliable end, to the present international anarchy.

Mr. Hull would do well to emphasize this point insistently. It is clear to him that continuation of present world conditions would "seriously jeopardize" the "security of this country." It is not yet clear to many of his fellow-countrymen. To make it so is a primary duty of far-sighted statesmanship in a democracy.

The New Housing Attack.

The failure of the building industry to participate in the now lagging recovery trend naturally adds to the interest taken in every effort of the Government to stimulate construction.

The new slum-clearance program will, of course, be of very limited efficiency in this respect. Nevertheless, after the false starts made in the past, the successful launching of a promising program in this field would lighten a growing pessimism concerning the outlook for the building industry. It might, therefore, have a psychologically stimulative effect upon private enterprise quite disproportionate to its limited direct effect.

The main purpose of the Wagner housing act, however, is to assist the elimination of unsafe and unsanitary homes in slum areas. That work calls for careful preliminary planning and deliberation in execution. It is a long-range program, not an emergency type of work initiated for the purpose of stimulating a business revival. Furthermore, its success cannot be gauged by the standards applicable to ordinary construction operations.

If hard experience makes for caution, Secretary Ickes is admirably equipped to avoid the pitfalls that have defeated previous efforts to provide low-cost housing accommodation for the underprivileged at a reasonable cost.

He has wisely called together housing authorities from all parts of the country to confer with him as to ways and means of giving effect to the new program. Competent administrative assistance is now to be had, as he says, while legal hindrances to slum clearance and land acquisition have been to a great extent overcome by changes in State laws. The most serious obstacle to execution of new housing projects is found in the excessively high construction costs prevailing in many parts of the country.

In the opinion of Mr. Ickes, progress on Government projects is being delayed because of collusion among contractors, builders and unions. This is a universal complaint, but it applies with especial force to those projects, designed to accommodate the poorest classes in the community, which operate under strict limitation on the construction cost of each housing unit.

Frank and free discussion of problems of this sort provides perhaps the most efficacious method of combating tendencies always at work to nullify the stimulative effects of subsidies by diverting them into the pockets of those employed in subsidized enterprise.

Administrative Tax Reforms.

The recent Congressional investigation into methods of tax evasion proved somewhat of a boomerang, so far as the Treasury was concerned. In exposing the sharp evasive practices of certain large taxpayers, Treasury officials inadvertently revealed the defects of the administrative machinery of assessment and collection.

Months, in some cases years, had elapsed between the time when evidence of dubious practices was unearthed and investigations were completed. Innumerable instances were cited of tax avoidance practices of dubious legality which had become virtually institutionalized. Moreover, delays in checking returns made it more difficult to reach agreements with taxpayers, and encouraged litigation of disputed issues.

As a result, the slow, creaking machinery of the Bureau of Internal Revenue came in for a good deal of unfavorable comment from Congressmen, forcing the Treasury officials to defend and apologize for their slow action. Possibly that experience has hastened the announcement of long-overdue reforms in the bureau, designed to cut unnecessary red tape and speed collection of revenue. If so, the tax inquiry will have served at least one useful purpose.

In any case, the Treasury should be commended for undertaking to correct some of the defects of its present system of tax collection by assigning its administrative expert, Harold N. Graves, to the task of overhauling the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Not only will Mr. Graves undertake to improve administration of existing tax laws but he will make plans for administering the new long-range tax program which is now being drafted by a Treasury committee headed by Undersecretary Roswell Magill.

While it would be rash to take too much for granted about the process of laying an administrative foundation for tax laws not yet passed by Congress, the needs of the future can be foreseen to some extent and provisionally met. The need for such advance planning has been demonstrated time and again, when new tax legislation has been passed. The unprepared officials entrusted with its administration are often handicapped by inadequate personnel and insufficient knowledge of the practical difficulties of enforcement. The result is loss of revenue due to delays in getting started and a good deal of initial fumbling productive of costly errors.

For these reasons it is encouraging that the Treasury is now taking steps to reform its administration of existing tax laws and to take care of future contingencies. Part of the delay in bringing delinquent taxpayers to justice, of course, is due to an inadequate number of agents to examine returns. When the Treasury has put its own house in order, showing a determination to achieve maximum results with the resources at its command, it will be in a stronger position to demand increased funds for the purpose of enlarging its force.

Luffing Through A Puff.

"In trimming the mainsail and jib for a reach, you will do well to slack off both sheets until the sails begin to shiver along the luff . . ."

This may not mean much to the layman but adherence to advice like this is what determines whether a sailor is a skipper or a novice. There is as much difference between a jib and jibing as there is between a cap and a capsize. And this was never better demonstrated than during the sailing events of the President's Regatta, over the week-end.

Off to a gentle and almost windless start, which bade fair to disappoint both participants and spectators, the scene at the start on Sunday was one of calm traditional to the day. Suddenly a prankish wind blew up, whitecaps danced, sails filled out as if blown by bellows, and sailors went into action. The fresh nor'wester and the choppy Potomac were aligned on one side; skippers and skill on the other. Some of the craft capsized; others spurted on to victory through sheets of spray.

What never ceases to puzzle the uninitiated is the fact that sailing is considered a hobby and a sport. To the landlubber it seems more a matter of hard work, heaving and hauling, perspiration and perseverance. But that's because he has never known the thrill of sailing into a world of sky and water. This is what every sailor knows. And it's why the President's Cup Regatta is gaining more and more recruits every year, both among those taking active part on the Potomac and those applauding from the Point.

What with all the fighting going on already, it's a pity the Civil War Between the States has to be fought again. The G. A. R. has voted to join the Confederates in a joint reunion, but stipulate that no flag shall be flown but that of the United States.

"Six Houses Stolen in Dayton, Ohio."—Headline. It is understood that the authorities are alertly watching the premises and expect to nab the thieves when they return for the lots.

You can always tell when Americans have enjoyed themselves unusually well on a holiday. The newspapers next day carry accounts of about 300 deaths and 1,000 injuries from accidents.

Readers Debate The Klan Issue

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I see where Imperial Wizard Evans states that no lifetime membership has ever been issued by the K. K. K. Let me relate briefly something I know and proof of which I saw with my own eyes:

In the winter of 1926-27 I was a patient at Walter Reed Hospital. In my ward was a patient who claimed to be a former secretary to the Imperial Wizard of the K. K. K., Mr. Hiram W. Evans. Not believing this man, I kidded him about this assertion. He took the kidding to heart, and to prove his contention that he really had been secretary to Evans, he produced the proof in the form of a lifetime membership card, and that card was signed by none other than Mr. Evans. No rubber stamp was used, but the signature was in long hand, and dated at Atlanta, Ga.

Evidently this patient was a "higher up" in the Klan, as he showed me many more memberships that he held, as well as several official citations which he had earned. And I will bet a nickel to the hole in the doughnut that the material shown me was authentic, and the patient was telling a straight story.

I know absolutely nothing about the Klan. Neither do I know when this Mr. Evans became an Imperial Wizard, but if he took his office since 1927, then the membership card I saw was a phony. If he was in office at that time, it stands to reason that the card was geniune. Does anyone know how long this bird has been an Imperial Wizard? I'd like to know if what I saw was baloney or not.

HORACE RUSH.
Washington, Sept. 17.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: This writer wishes to indorse everything which was written by "Square Dealer" in this column under date of September 18, 1937.

While I know nothing whatever of the Ku Klux Klan, it is my opinion that their secret activities, regardless of what they are, will measure up quite well with the principles employed by any other secret organization. After all, it is a secret body, and there is no way of our knowing just what is being done.

Not only that, but many things which are done openly, with a stamp of approval placed thereon, look odd to say the very least when one tries to analyze these matters. It would be not amiss for everything and for everyone to undergo a probe at least twice a year, just as we go about spring and fall cleaning. If this were done, many things might pop up which would prove eye-openers.

ANOTHER VOICE.
Washington, Sept. 18.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Apropos of Mr. Mechem's query in The Post of September 16 as to why Mr. Black is being singled out for attack. It seems to me, this attack is really an attack on the President, and Mr. Black is being martyrized as a means to an end. If it was not Mr. Black, it would be somebody else.

The big idea behind it all, you know, Mr. Mechem, is to make the President all the trouble possible to kill him off with one block after another of the voting public, thereby clearing the ground for the return of the Republicans to power. See?

The pity of it is, that some of the Democrats who have been bitten by the Presidential bug have been willing helpers, and, still worse, some of them, actuated by petty spite, are willing to see the party defeated in order to wreak vengeance.

MRS. A. M. BARCLAY.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Thomas Eckloff's letter in The Post of September 18 refers to the Ku Klux Klan as an "American society." It refers to "insinuations" against Justice Black.

Since when has hatred of Catholics, Negroes and Jews, or any other particular group, been an "American" principle? Also there are no "insinuations" against the new appointee to the Supreme Court of the land, but open and published charges.

The attack is not, as Mr. Eckloff alleges, "upon the President of the United States," but upon intolerance, which rears its ugly head again in the land of the free and the home of the brave. Down with such a bigoted, intolerant and thoroughly un-American disease!

ARISTOTLE.
Washington, Sept. 19.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I might suggest that Elmer C. Crowell, who writes in your paper of the 17th, should study his subject a little more before he gives out his opinions. He starts in by comparing the Klan to the Knights of Columbus and the Masons, while anybody with even a grain of sense knows there is no similarity whatsoever.

Since the American people are by nature "joiners," it would be pretty hard to find one who does not belong to some society. No one would be against Senator Black if he belonged to the Klan, provided this organization was even half-way respectable. However, the Klan is one of the most despicable organizations known to mankind and any man who was foolhardy enough to join it should not get, or even expect, any consideration from others.

The gentleman goes on to say that there is no reason why Mr. Black could not serve the people impartially. My dear sir, there is a reason and a very good one and it is the one that the newspapers have all been discussing. If he belongs to the Klan you will find that is ample reason for the objections to Mr. Black. And not only that, but for him to serve would blacken the whole court as a body. Even granted that Mr. Black is sufficiently capable, and that is still very much in doubt, it is very evident that he was slipped over on the people when they weren't looking.

Mr. Black may no longer be listed as a Klan member, but just the same he is branded for all time to come. Such talk from his sympathizers as "it shouldn't make any difference" and "he no longer belongs" is all nonsense and beside the point. Really, I, myself, am beginning to be for Mr. Black, because of the panning he is getting, but not so much that I am willing to forget the whole business. He does not belong on the bench and even if he is for the "common people," as they are so quaintly called, he still doesn't belong; in fact never did.

RAY NEWMAN.
Washington, Sept. 18.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the controversy over Justice Hugo L. Black one fact stands out as conspicuously as an eclipse of the sun on a day that had been bright and clear:

Had Black's record in the Senate been reactionary, had he been the friend instead of the unswerving foe of "economic royalists," little if anything would ever have been said about his alleged one-time membership in the Ku Klux Klan. His conduct as a progressive Senator, with strong sympathies for labor, could not be attacked by any who share those sympathies. That plutocrats would assail him for his legislative activities was to be expected and produced no appreciable effect on the masses of the American people. When the charge of Klan membership was brought up, it was, of course, a totally different matter, for progressives of all parties are naturally hostile to religious and racial bigotry. The accusation, if true, would be serious.

But let us not forget that many of those who are now insisting that Black is disqualified had no word of condemnation for the effort to line up a united Klan behind Herbert Hoover for the Presidency. Let us also remember that many another Southern Senator and Representative has welcomed Klan support and probably a number of them have been Klansmen—some may still be. These men were not, however, militant in prosecuting the utility trust and in exposing the corruption and chicanery of big business. And none of them has, of course, been named to the Supreme Court bench.

Maybe it is true that Black is or has been a member of the Klan. Again, maybe it is not true. Let us make haste slowly in passing judgment. The animus against his appointment came from predatory interests that give not a tinker's damn about religious and racial liberty and tolerance. Their sole anxiety was to keep off the supreme bench a man who was a consistent and persistent enemy of legalized exploitation.

LINN A. E. GALE.
Washington, Sept. 18.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial "Fake Liberalism" brings to mind the famous line:

"Thou dost protest too much!"

Any serious liberal must look with a critical eye at the vociferous newspaper campaign against the New Deal being directed at the moment at Justice Black. There is glee implied in every line of the attack on Black. The newspaper editors who are against the liberal policies of the New Deal are having a swell time trying to frighten liberals into deserting these policies.

I don't know whether Black was ever a member of the Klan. No definite and convincing proof has yet been presented. He has not spoken. It is obvious to any sensible person that Senator Black has not acted or expressed Klan principles. In action he has been an enemy of all the Klan stands for except, perhaps, its opposition to racial equality and to the anti-lynching bill.

The Klan today represents a Southern and Middle Western advance guard against unionism and the effective enforcement of the Wagner labor relations act. Many of the same newspapers which attack Black on the unproved allegation of Klan connections are at one with the Klan's main purpose. They oppose Black because he is opposed to them and to the Klan on this fundamental point.

SIDNEY WILLIAMS.
Chevy Chase, Md., Sept. 14.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A letter from a gentleman signed "Square Dealer" occupied a prominent place in your paper of September 18. Either the gentleman is trying hard to be funny, or he is taking the opposite side just for an argument.

He admits that Justice Black may be a little narrow. Sure he is—the edge of a sheet of paper would look like a hippo's mouth alongside of Mr. Black. He also goes on to say that his admiration for Senator Black has grown, so naturally he believes that Senator Black has grown along with it. That's good logic for you. He also dwells on the fact that Mr. Black has the "make good" habit, that is, I suppose, because Mr. Black went along with everything the President suggested.

He even wanders off into a day dream about the possibility of Mr. Black being a Presidential candidate. That really is going the limit. I would as soon vote for a trained monkey as vote for Mr. Black. And how come he resents the newspapers being down on Mr. Black? He had it coming to him, didn't he? Why doesn't Mr. Black 'fess up and say he did belong to the Klan, and so what? Because Mr. Black knows that for every 1 like "Square Dealer" there are 99 others who wish no part with anything even suggestive of the Klan and their "so-much-to-those-who-bring-in-new-members" idea.

Having It Both Ways.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Constitution Day speech of Mr. Roosevelt was entirely inappropriate to the occasion and in execrable taste.

In one breath he lambasted the Supreme Court as reactionary and a stumbling block in the way of his efforts to reform the world and usher in Utopia, and in the next breath he damned the lawyers who gave opinions that certain laws were unconstitutional, which laws were subsequently sustained by the court.

How can such an utter inconsistency be reconciled? Either the lawyers were right and the court wrong or vice versa. The court is damned, and yet sustains the very law condemned by lawyers who were condemned by Roosevelt.

There was but one statement in the speech with which the writer was in agreement, namely, that there is a crisis in the Nation. But it is not the crisis the President meant.

AMERICAN.

The Human Side of Paris

THE very existence of Paris is, to my mind, a standing proof of a quality supposed to be a specialty of Germans, the genius for hard work. Paris did not just happen. Its magnificent avenues were not the chance inspiration of a lively salon put into execution the next morning by a squad of indolent, pleasure-loving workmen with minds intent on a forthcoming frolic. Its beautiful, clean, shiny streets, mile after mile, are not kept clean by clever dialetics uttered over cafe tables. Its wonderful meals are not served merely by knack alone. All of these things and the million other things that make up Paris represent work, intelligent, long-houred, unstinting work.

And the artists! How they must toil! Rubens, with his thousand canvases, would seem, if not slothful, certainly no unique phenomenon of work when set down in the present-day artists' quarter of Paris. I would be interested to know the annual acreage of painting output and the annual tonnage of statuary output. If Paris were an American city, some boosters' organization would long since have computed these things. It would be telling us that the paintings laid end to end would make a 10-foot sidewalk from Paris to Strasbourg; that the statues heaped up in one pile would dwarf the Eiffel Tower.

Seriously, the energy of Paris artists is astonishing. Art works fill a score of museums. Spring and fall salons crowd the Grand Palais to the very eaves. Hundreds of art shops on Rue de la Boetie, Rue Lafitte and other streets display an endless succession of new objets d'art. Impromptu art fairs are constantly recurring on Boulevard Raspail, on the hill of Montmartre, on almost any unexpected street where art lovers might wander; yes, even in the subway corridors. Much of this work is, of course, mere pot-boiling. Much else is so completely obscure, or void of meaning, that even art dealers will tell you confidentially that they can make nothing of it. But much else is good or nearly good. And it all contributes to one's growing conviction that the city of pleasure is really a city of work.

Tourists in Paris work too. Anyone who has watched their patient trudging in the Louvre know this. Of course, it cannot be helped and it is absurd to condemn those who pack Paris into five days. For myself, I have been fortunate enough to see the city slowly, which transforms this sort of "trudgery" into genuine and abiding pleasure. I have seen for myself during substantial stays in six different quarters that the French capital is a beehive with 4,000,000 workers, very few drones—and no queen.

Young people of half a hundred nations come here for their education, and, quite contrary to general American ideas on the subject, they labor mightily to make good use of it. I have watched Paris education in daily operation upon my own children and an older nephew. It is no sinecure. It leads onward and upward those who have the mental courage to tackle it, and strews the casual and lazy ones outside its path.

The great Sorbonne is all-pervasive. Probably no university in the world is so widely known or so cosmopolitan. It is pleasant to think that China, Peru, Persia, Finland, Rumania, not to mention our own United States, are drawing at this great fountain of knowledge, founded by Louis the Saint and named for his confessor, Robert de Sorbon. For five centures its primary interest was the spinning of theological cobwebs to trap the unwary, and its old stones must blush for the narrow spirit and fierce rancors it engendered, but the Revolution made short shrift of it, and then in 1808 Napoleon restored it on a broad and useful basis.

The Sorbonne's international quality is nowhere better seen than outside its gray walls and inside the innumerable small restaurants which cluster about it. Students from almost every country under the canopy are encountered, and it is an excellent game to try to determine what language your chance tablemates are speaking. Just as you have decided that it is probably Rumanian, a strange phrase makes you wonder if it may not rather be Polish. More likely, however, it is Czech or perhaps Bulgarian—or, after all, Rumanian.

Paris has a thousand colors to its tapestry, a thousand facets to its jeweled surface. It is rightly annoyed that so many Americans see only the grand boulevards and Montmarte and go home like talebearers to spread the story of only one dubious phase of Parisian life as though it were the whole. A city of refuge for the emigre, a city of inspiration for all who love any of the arts, it is unquestionably one of the most human and most hospitable capitals of Europe. Its genuine greatness lights the annals of history. Its versatility is a never-ending source of astonishment to those who come to know it. I have not attained to the point of view of the thick-and-thin Lutetiophile who can see nothing but perfections in the city on the Seine, but I have gradually come to appreciate it as an old and trusted friend.

I can see why this Paris, having captured all the colors of dawn, high noon and sunset, to weave them into its own daily life of toil, has thereby captured the imagination of the world.

What Does A D. C. Taxi-Driver See And Hear . . After Midnight?

IT WAS QUIET on Ninth street. The bars had closed for the night, and the last late patron had made his way homeward. The lights in the little movie theaters . . offering: "Complete Show—$.15" . . . had long since been turned out and, save for the restaurant at the corner of E, there was little sign of life.

TOM McCARTHY.

A heavy man, carrying a battered guitar case, made his way up the street and paused in front of "Jimmy's" Burlesque Theater. The lobby was darkened, but, by the light from the street lamps, he surveyed the "coming attractions." As he roved back and forth in the lobby and then out to the sidewalk, there was a strain of exhaustion in his labored movement.

He didn't seem to be in any hurry, but, finally, he turned from the signs in front of the theater and, with listless strides, he made toward F st. I hadn't noticed the little man, until the man with the guitar case turned toward F. Possibly the little man had been standing in a doorway—or even sleeping there. He walked with the strange loose-jointed gallop of the drunk. With an absurd expenditure of energy, he was walking absurdly slow.

I don't know what he said to the larger man. He might have been talking the nonsense of the intoxicated. He may have been asking for money. Whatever it was the answer was given in a single-muttered oath, and the big man hurried on.

Grotesquely charging in uncertain lurches, the little man came toward him again. Again I failed to hear his words. This time the reaction was more violent. The big man raised the case, using the small end like the handle of a ball bat.

"Get away from me!" he screamed, and a handful of curses tumbled from his mouth.

This time the little man turned. He lurched off down the street, his legs shooting ahead of him, aimlessly like those of a comic dancer.

• • • •

WHEN IT WAS once again quiet on the street, I told the cab driver that he could get under way. He threw the cab into gear and said, "I get awful tired of that kind of stuff.

"I get awful tired of this night driving and the drunks and the kind of stuff we've just been looking at. I don't know why it's worse at night than it is in the daytime, but there is more of this 'dog eat dog.'

"Driving around at night like I do, you see things. You see the little chiselers and you see the big ones. You see the drunks tossed out on their ears, after they've kicked through with their last dime and have started to get noisy. You see some half-crazy guy like the bird on the sidewalk, crawling for enough dough to buy another drink, or maybe even a place to flop for the night. And you see some guy like the big fellow, who probably isn't doing so good himself, gettin' ready to hang one on the little guy.

"I get awful tired of it," he said.

"Why don't you do something else?" I asked him.

"I make more money doin' this," he said. "Some of it's money I wouldn't have touched with a 10-foot pole, before I got into this business. Now I tell myself to 'Wise up,' and I take it.

"What kind of dough is that," I asked him.

"Oh, you know the story. Some guy that hasn't had enough to drink and the bars are closed. He wants a pint, and you know where he can get it. Or maybe he just isn't ready to go home to bed. You can take him to some joint, where maybe he'll get his head handed to him . . . or you can tell him that you don't know of any places. That's what you do tell them . . . until you get wised up!

• • • •

"A LOT OF THE TIME, from midnight on, you're hauling drunks. Sometimes that's a break and I admit it. If they're feeling right, you get a good tip. But it ain't all gravy.

"If they're too drunk, I won't pick them up. You're likely to get them home and have to help them in. They're sometimes too far gone to get the money out of their pockets. If I should take my pay from their wallets, I'd go down and tell it to the judge. I've learned a thing about that though. When I get one of those in my cab, I drive around to the station and let the 'cops' pay me off. Then I take him home.

"But you get sick of this stuff," he said, "night after night."

"You could drive in the daytime," I suggested.

"With any luck, I make more this way. The traffic is better, and I make more dough. That's what counts."

"Saving for something?" I asked.

"Not saving a cent. Not putting away a nickel." He didn't raise his voice, but there was a tightness to it. It was thin and hard, like the covering on a drum head stretched to the breaking point.

"Oh, hell," he said. He started to laugh, and, though it started harshly, it ended on a more natural note.

• • • •

"FORGET IT," he said, "I'm just shooting off my mouth. I ain't got so many kicks. I'm a little fed up, but I'm not doin' so bad. I'm better off than a lot of these mugs. I've got a kid. He's startin' into school this week."

"That's fine," I said. "That's something."

"I'm sending him to a private school," he said. "It's got 1,700 acres, and they get the right kind of food. It says in the catalogue they've got a diah-diah."

"Dietitian?" I supplied.

"Yeah, that's right. He'll be taken care of pretty good, even if it does take dough."

"Well, mister," I said, "it's none of my business, but I don't think a public school would hurt him. A lot of real folks have gone to the public schools."

"I know, I know," he said, "but you see, the kid's mother died last year."

When he turned his head toward me again he was laughing very quietly in a bitter sort of way. It wasn't pleasant to hear.

"What do I know about raisin' kids?" he asked. "At the school they'll teach him to be a real guy . . . maybe a gentleman, even. See how it is?"

"Sure," I said. "I see how it is."

Cash And Carry

Application Of Provisions Of Neutrality Law Regarding Shipping Would Not Inconvenience Japan, Says Observer.

By Herbert M. Bratter.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

SHOULD THE United States withdraw all its vessels from the Japan trade and institute a cash-and-carry policy such as is envisaged by the Neutrality act, such action would undoubtedly harm China but would not seriously inconvenience Japan.

Although up-to-date figures are scarce, the Japanese Finance Ministry this year reported that in 1934 only 6½ per cent of Japan's imports in terms of value and barely 5 per cent of its exports were carried in American ships. Should American ships skip Japanese ports, Japan would doubtless have little difficulty in meeting such a shipping shortage by putting into service some of the heavy tonnage now under construction, or by drawing on foreign tramp services.

The chief sufferer would be the American shipping industry, which because of subsidy arrangements and other circumstances would probably find it quite difficult to obtain employment on other runs.

Doubtless these facts are well known to the Government, which follows closely the fate of America's varied and valued interests in the Oriental trade. The Administration's concern over shipping is probably no less than that over commerce, as voiced recently by Secretary Roper. "The maintenance of normal trade relations with China and Japan," he said, "are very important. They are both large consumers of American products. Thus, any interruption, however temporary, therefore, in the normal flow of our raw materials and manufactured products into those countries would be unfortunate. It might result in permanent loss of our trade."

Nevertheless, the Administration has now taken steps to prevent Government-owned vessels from carrying arms, ammunition or implements of war to China or Japan. This de facto and incomplete recognition of a state of belligerency in the Far East is not otherwise affirmed, however, and American privately owned vessels may still engage in such carrying trade at their own risk.

China Trade Important To American Shippers.

IN VIEW of the possibility that the ban may at some future time be extended to all American vessels, the Far Eastern shipping situation needs looking into. If American vessels are not important in Japan's total trade—although of not negligible importance in that country's transpacific commerce—is our trade with China important to this country's shipping interests? This question must be answered in the affirmative. For, if we eliminate our coastwise tonnage, over 16 per cent of our freight and passenger vessels are in the Oriental service In addition there are eight round-the-world boats.

Naturally, American ships carry some of Japan's imports and exports, while Japanese vessels carry a considerable part of this country's trade, other than the coastwise service, from which foreign vessels are excluded.

The Commerce Department used to publish regular data on the nationality of the ships carrying American imports and exports. The information is still collected by the Government, but for some reason is no longer made public, the latest published American statistics covering the trade carried in Japanese ships being those for 1932.

Analyzing the value of our imports and exports to Japan and China in 1932, we find that Japanese ships had much the larger portion of the trade. Of our 1932 exports to Japan and China, the Japanese carried $63,000,000 and American vessels only $38,000,000. Of our imports, Japanese vessels carried $87,000,000, as compared with $47,000,000 accounted for by American ships. In the Oriental silk trade, where speed is a great factor because of the concentrated value of that article, fast American passenger vessels get a large share of the business. In the case of bulky American cotton exports from Southern ports, however, speed is not so important and the Japanese boats are able to get the bulk of the trade, especially since there is often a close relationship in Japan between those owning the vessels and those buying, processing and marketing the cotton.

Japan's Merchant Fleet Third In Size.

AMONG the ocean-going merchant vessels of 2,000 tons and over, Japan's fleet is listed at third in size. First comes the British Empire, with 15,700,000 gross tons. The United States, with its large coastwise trade, comes next, with 8,500,000 tons, and Japan third, with 3,200,000 tons. Considering only freight vessels and not passenger ships or tankers, the three countries have respectively 9,300,000 tons, 4,600,000 tons and 2,300,000 tons. Germany is fourth, with 1,700,000 tons. These are all 1936 figures. If American coastwise vessels be excluded, this country's ocean-going freight tonnage is probably not far from 1,500,000 tons, which puts us behind Japan.

For some time Japan has had an active shipbuilding program under way in accordance with plans of the ministry of communications. Last October 816,000 tons were on order and under construction and the Oriental Economist reported most shipyards booked to capacity. There was even more anxiety lest, in time of future business depression, the post-war experience of an oversupply might be repeated. Of the tonnage mentioned, 549,000 represented cargo carriers designed for regular runs to New York and elsewhere.

Under the circumstances, Japan would appear to be quite self-sufficient in shipping in the event of our full withdrawal for neutrality reasons. Japanese official figures for 1934 show over 70 per cent of Japan's exports, by value, and over 67 per cent of its imports were transported in Japanese vessels.

The Japanese newspaper, Asahi Shimbun, is authority for the statement last year that, on the Japan-New York run, 61 per cent of the tonnage is Japanese; on the Japan-India run, 73 per cent; on the Japan-Australia run, 79 per cent, and on the run to Europe, 12 per cent. From another source it is indicated that Japanese ships carry 38 per cent of the sugar exported from the Philippines to United States Atlantic ports.

While these figures have not been verified, they are indicative of a fairly self-sufficient merchant marine in the case of Japanese-American trade. Also it should be remembered that Japanese ships also carry cargoes between foreign countries, thereby adding to the country's income from abroad.

Japan In Midst Of Shipbuilding Boom.

FURTHER indication of the prominence of Japanese bottoms in the trade with America are our statistics of vessels cleared for Japan in 1936, including passenger vessels, in which American ships predominate. Of total clearances of 4,322,000 net registered tons, Japanese boats accounted for 2,078,000 and American vessels only 763,000 tons. British vessels cleared here for Japan accounted for 647,000 tons and Norwegian, 273,000. Less than 18 per cent of the total tonnage cleared was American.

In contrast to the situation in Japan, America's merchant marine is relatively less up to date. During 1930-32 the American merchant marine, including coastwise shipping, increased by 435,000 gross tons, and Japan's—with the coastwise item negligible—by 315,000 tons. (These figures ignore vessels smaller than 2,000 tons.) During the next four years, however, Japan built 54 ships of 335,000 tons, while the United States added only 12 vessels of 107,000 tons.

Of America's total merchant marine, only a small part runs to the Orient. Out of 1,160 coastwise and oversea freight and passenger vessels, only 48 go to the Far East and 13 around the world. Those 48 represent only about 6 per cent of our total comparable tonnage. Of the 48 vessels, 5 are Government owned and now excluded from the arms-carrying business in the Orient. Most Government-owned cargo vessels are, of course, laid up and unserviceable. Some 184 freighters surviving from the World War float in "graveyards" at Norfolk, New York, New Orleans and elsewhere.

Polar Campers Report Base Drifting Speedily

Moscow, Sept. 20 (AP).—Commander Ivan Papanin, of the Soviet North Pole expedition, today radioed that his icefloe camp has drifted so far south that the expedition eventually may have to be taken off by an icebreaker instead of a plane, as planned.

The polar camp drifted past the eighty-sixth parallel, rapidly moving away from the Pole, but the explorers determined to spend the winter on the ice to continue studying weather and other polar conditions.

Peace Barrage

By Barnet Nover

The Sound And The Fury.

IT IS SYMPTOMATIC to the prevalence of war fears in the United States that at no time more than now has there been so much talk of peace.

The barrage that is being laid down in this country against war and particularly against American involvment in war is stupendous. But it happens to be little more than a barrage of words. It were almost as though the American people believe that by insistently and persistently mouthing the magic syllable the Evil One can be warded off. But the very fact that so much of present-day peace talk is pitched in a hysterical key shows that in our heart of hearts we are none too sure of the efficacy of our charm.

At the same time the call for constructive action to meet the danger that threatens us and world civilization brings an utterly confused response.

• • • •

IN HIS FINE speech of last Sunday Secretary Hull rejected for the United States the doctrine of isolation. With this stand the overwhelming majority of Americans will agree, nicluding many of those who argue for isolation without knowing what it involves.

For instance there is the Farmers Equity Union of Wisconsin which recently petitioned the Government to apply the neutality law to China and Japan. "Farmers of this Nation are tired of being the tax goats and having our children blown to bits to satisfy the dollar greed of a few aristocrats," said their petition. And also:

Americans going abroad for their living should seek protection under the flag of the nation financing them. Capital invested abroad should be no grounds for our sending soldiers to protect them. Trading with these countries should be abandoned. If this is done the manufacturers of such contraband goods should assume full responsibility and make no fuss if their cargoes are blown up or confiscated.

• • • •

THE ARGUMENT is, of course, that it is the wicked manufacturers alone who get us into trouble. So far as the industrialists are concerned this particular farm group is isolationist to the finger tips. But would these farmers be equally willing to see our exports of farm products cut off if in that way peace may be preserved?

No, the farmers who produce for export are not isolationists in fact. They are isolationists only with respect to the other fellow. And they are not alone in this attitude.

• • • •

THERE ARE only a few Americans who want isolation which, as Secretary Hull has correctly pointed out would mean

The withdrawal of the resources—economic, cultural, educational and moral of each country from the others, thus making it harder for all to improve their situations, and consequently contributing to the dissatisfactions which foster war.

But if not isolation, then what? Mr. Hull himself wisely rejects the opposite extreme, i. e. "ill-advised and unnecessary intervention in the affairs of the outside world." He favors the constructive alternative of co-operation. But in the present state of public opinion he is obviously fearful of stating precisely what that alternate involves.

Certainly it is not enough simply to issue a resounding catalogue of international virtues and get other nations to approve them. Nations have gone on record before in favor of the good, the true and the beautiful.

More than 60 of them solemnly signed the Briand-Kellogg pact outlawing war as an instrument of policy. An equal number, at one time or other, have accepted the principles embodied in the League Covenant. Nine of them—including Japan—pledged themselves to observe the nine-power pact. And so on. But if any and all of these solemn commitments in favor of peace have had any binding effect on aggressor nations there is no evidence of it in the world of today.

• • • •

MR. HULL realizes, as do a great many Americans, that a policy of scuttle and run will pay few dividends of peace either to this generation or those who come after us. As he correctly states: "Any nation which shows no concern for the safety or the activities of its nationals abroad would soon expose itself to the flouting of even elementary rights."

Yet as the theater of war spreads it becomes increasingly more difficult for any one nation, even one so powerful as the United States, to act alone in the protection of the rights of its citizens abroad or what is an even greater stake, the preservation of the fabric of peace. Either we perform that necessary job in co-operation with like-minded nations or, perforce, we condemn ourselves to an isolation which can only be had at a terrible cost.

Yet even the slightest gesture in the direction of international co-operation meets with resistance. For instance, six American peace organizations have just issued a joint manifesto arguing against American participation in the labors of the Far Eastern Advisory Committee since there is the possibility that body might urge strong action which the United States must under no circumstances undertake. Only if the neutrality act is first put into force would these organizations favor American membership on the committee. In other words, it is all right for Uncle Sam to hang his clothes on the hickory limb, provided he agrees not to go near the water.

• • • •

HYSTERIA never solved any problems and the point of view of most of our professional peace organizations at the present time represents the very apogee of hysteria. Being frightened folk they have lost their capacity to reason. Like a retreating army, they think with their feet, not with their heads or even their hearts.

But the prize example of confusion is that presented by an organization calling itself the World Peace Association, whose executive officer, as it happens, is also a State representative of the War Resisters International.

After urging the President to invoke the neutrality law regarding the Far East and withdraw all military and naval forces from that area, this organization demands that he call a conference of all nations "for the purpose of devising ways and means of establishing democratic world government in order that the earth may be freed of the curse of war."

"The establishment of world government," this priceless document goes on to say, "means substituting law and order for the present chaotic system of international outlawry . . . Let us end this most infernal crime of the centuries by bringing into existence an international congress backed by world courts, a world navy large enough to keep down piracy and an international police large enough to maintain law and order on land."

Comment is superfluous.

Edith Wharton

By William Lyon Phelps

Author Of 44 Books.

Edith Wharton was born in New York on January 24, 1862, and died at Saint-Price-sous-Foret, France, August 11, 1937.

Her first book was published in 1897, and this autumn will appear her last, "Ghosts," for which she had read the proofs; thus her literary career covered exactly 40 years.

She was the author of 44 books. In the summer of 1928, we had the pleasure of taking lunch and spending the day with her at her beautiful place near Paris. I asked her if she were working on a new book, and she answered with a melancholy smile, "I am always writing." Her habit was to write in bed from early morning till lunch time.

• • • •

Although she had had minor successes, her first best-seller was "The House of Mirth," in 1905. From that time she was regarded, in both Europe and America, as one of our foremost novelists. I like best of all her books "The Age of Innocence," which won the Pulitzer Prize in 1920. Katherine Cornell appeared in the play. Her next best book was probably "Ethan Frome," which also had success on the stage two years ago; and the dramatization of another of her stories, "The Old Maid," took the Pulitzer Prize.

I admire immensely her novel "The Children," which appeared in 1928. That final laugh still rings in my ears.

Peace For Self-Preservation

Legion Hears Plea for Enlightened Nationalism.

Text of speech yesterday by Secretary of State Cordell Hull in Boston:

It was with great pleasure that I accepted the invitation to speak here, on the subject of international trade and the role played by international-trade pacts. I can think of no more appropriate place for such a discussion than before this group of men, who as scientists or as practical men of affairs, are intimately concerned with the problem of distribution.

The broad unsolved economic problem of distribution is how actually to find customers to enable the machinery of production to operate continuously and fully, economically and profitably. Our modern civilization definitely has within its grasp the productive means and resources for supplying the material needs of mankind on a standard of living never yet attained. But production continues to fall short, at times tragically short, of its possibilities, and we are still far from achieving the peace and security of a world of contented people.

Viewing the world scene, I am deeply convinced that the removal of excessive trade barriers and the restoration of the normal processes of international commerce offer the most satisfactory foundation for a stable structure of business, of peace and of democratic government itself. World trade as a supplement to domestic commerce is the only means calculated to raise the standard of living throughout the world to a level which will discourage recurrent preaching and acceptance of campaigns of imperialistic aggression. The world has experienced a substantial measure of uneven and uncertain recovery from the low point of the depression—in some countries the 1929 levels of production are being passed. But this world recovery, largely connected as it is with war preparedness and artificial stimulants and moving in an atmosphere of doubt, is not yet stable or healthy. There is dangerous economic soundness today in numerous commercial countries and world areas.

Isolation Program Is Branded Absurd

In the last few years several important countries have sought to isolate themselves from depression or to remedy unemployment and low purchasing power by excluding foreign goods and satisfying their own needs by their own production regardless of cost. This only intensifies and perpetuates the absurdity of 1929 and its aftermath, when under attempted isolation each nation found itself with burdensome surpluses or idle productive capacity cut off from its natural markets. At present, armament programs provide activity and absorb unemployment in some of the countries where more productive employment is lacking. But the price of isolation and self-sufficiency and of unproductive industry is an inevitable lowering of the standards of living. Such a policy contributes to high political tension, international instability and increasing danger of war.

I shall recur to this, but let me first briefly discuss other phases of the policy which I advocate, since even its basic economic ideas are not undisputed. More or less everywhere we still find men who subscribe to the really suicidal fallacy that, at least as between countries, it is good business to sell but bad business to buy. We even find whole nations which, to their immediate visible injury and regardless of indirect damaging repercussions, subscribe in practice to the utterly false notion that all foreign trade is bad and that a nation can most effectively promote its welfare by producing within its frontiers everything that it needs, no matter how extreme the cost and how great the sacrifice in consumption and in variety and quality. This conception is preached under the high-sounding names of economic nationalism, economic self-sufficiency, autarchy and many others. Properly, it should be discussed only under the name of deliberate and self-imposed economic impoverishment.

Outlines Duties Of Governments

Of course, the first duty of every government is to preserve the existence of the nation as a sovereign entity, having its own customs, traditions and social structures. For this, each government must seek to promote within its territories a healthy and balanced operation of productive forces, designed to give the people the highest possible measure of material welfare. It, therefore, is often deemed advisable by governments to take measures which restrict, in varying degrees, absolute freedom of international economic relations. The task of responsible statesmanship, supported by enlightened public opinion, is to find a working balance between the various complex forces which operate in relations within and among nations—between the essential domestic and international factors of economic activity. And this in turn requires consideration of numerous and complicated interests and conditions, although trade and the active movement of buying and selling of goods are generally more advantageous than inactivity, stagnation and narrow markets obtained by restricting trade.

Unfortunately, the striking of such a balance is often distorted by shortsighted policies or by selfish motives. The results may be plainly seen in the various manifestations of exaggerated restrictions, with which the world is only too familiar. Spurred by the depression, governments have not been content to try only the old-fashioned panacea and sovereign remedy for economic ailments which is advertised to cure a country by adding new layers of bricks on the tariff wall around it. They have combined new remedies out of the old medicine chest, new devices, such as quotas, import licenses, exchange controls, clearing and compensation arrangements and many kinds of preferential agreements.

There is no question at all that these devices have vastly increased the ills they were intended to cure. They were largely responsible for the catastrophic decline in the volume of international commerce and for the diversion of much of what remained away from natural or normal channels. They caused immense surpluses to be dammed up in many countries, created distressing shortages of essential commodities in many others, led to a widespread resort to uneconomical substitutes. They were thus instrumental in the disorganization of prices, employment, profits—in short, in the creation of the whole gamut of the disruption and destruction which were so characteristic of the depression.

Nor has the United States proved itself immune from the effects of collapsed international commerce. There are those who tell us that foreign trade is unimportant for the United States. Imagine, however, what our domestic situation would be if 30 or 40 of our great surplus-producing industries—such as cotton, hog products, wheat, tobacco, machinery, automobiles, copper, lead, oil, coal and iron and steel products—should have to restrict their output to our domestic consumption. Surely we have not so soon forgotten that the actual curtailment of our outlets abroad did in fact bring misery to many sections of the country, shook and dislocated our entire economic system and made the depression in this country far deeper than it otherwise would have been.

Attempting to Undo Errors of the Past

We are attempting to remedy the situation and to undo the errors of the past. Instead of encouraging the world, by our own attitudes and actions, to drive toward a greater and greater measure of national economic self-containment, we have embarked upon a course of policy and action designed to promote a return to normal and healthy commercial relations among nations. We have chosen a method, not hastily. We are working on the job with determination and painstaking care. We have made some progress. We hope for more.

Our method, as you know, is that of international trade agreements. Let me explain its technical bases very briefly, but, I hope, very clearly, since the wisdom of these, too, has been disputed.

Much of our loss of foreign trade has been due to the general effects of the depression and cannot be clearly traced to specific causes. However, we do recognize three principal factors. First, foreign governments have imposed greatly increased import restrictions on some of the principal outlets for our goods. Second, many governments have diverted their purchases from us to our foreign competitors through discriminatory arrangements. Third, our own excessive barriers against foreign products have curtailed the ability of foreign countries to purchase our goods.

We are dealing with these three aspects of the problem in our 16 trade agreements, in the following way:

First, as to the foreign restrictions, each agreement provides for a reduction of barriers against some articles we export and gives assurance against future increase of obstructions on others. In each case we select commodities of which the United States should be a principal source of supply for the other country and with respect to which trade is particularly restricted by excessive customs treatment or seems likely to be unduly restricted by possible future measures. Thus, in the case of each country, we deal with those specific restrictions which hurt the most and the removal or mitigation of which is most likely to result in a real expansion of trade.

Mutual Guarantees Provided in Pacts

Second, as to discrimination, each agreement provides for a mutual guarantee of non-discriminatory treatment. The other country promises us unconditionally to grant to our trade treatment as favorable as is granted to any country, and we in turn give the other country a similar promise. International trade is now so involved in restrictions and special arrangements that great care is necessary in drafting the provisions to assure that this promise is a guarantee of actual non-discrimination and not merely of some plausible equality of treatment which permits actual discrimination. Careful assurances of this kind have been devised and we are in effect in the general provisions of our trade agreements.

Third, as to American obstacles to foreign trade, we grant carefully considered tariff reductions, assurances against future tariff increases on certain items during the life of the agreement, and guarantees of equal treatment such as we obtain from the other countries. Reductions are granted only after the most careful study of the domestic effects, and in this our analysis of the different items is undoubtedly far closer than any ever given the same items in constructing our tariffs. Our experts look to the facts and to the facts alone. We have been able to make concessions which, with the counterparts granted on other items by the other countries, have cleared the way for a greatly increased mutually profitable trade, with all its benefits of employment and business activity.

In due time, it will be possible to get from trade statistics some conclusive measurement of our accomplishment, although in the chaotic international economic situation, there are too many variables affecting the movement of trade from year to year to permit the exact measurement of the effect of any one factor. As a rough measure, in 1936 our export trade with 14 countries, with which trade agreements were in effect all or part of that year, increased by 18.2 per cent over 1935, while our trade with non-agreement countries increased 9.2 per cent. The continued increase for 1937 has been even more significant. At the same time, our policy of extending the benefit of concessions made in the agreements to all countries which give us nondiscriminatory treatment has served to mitigate many discriminations formerly directed against our trade in countries with which we have not as yet concluded trade agreements.

We plan to go on with the program with cumulative effect. It is not always easy for countries involved in a network of special arrangements covering their foreign trade and their foreign payments, to break away all at once and enter into the type of international trade pact and principles of policy represented by our agreements. However, the pacts themselves through their general provisions form a valuable contribution to the international law governing commercial relations. As their number grows, they will furnish a sounder basis for international relations generally, and international trade will increasingly move along the channels of mutual and natural advantage and will expand in volume.

Plan to Proceed With Programs

The restored and liberated movement of trade would furnish an essential condition for the operation of a stable international monetary arrangement. On the one hand, if absence of restriction makes possible the easy adjustment of trade movements, the necessity for large one-sided movements of gold is lessened. On the other hand, enlarged trading opportunity will make it easier for countries to acquire the metallic reserves which would enable them to join in international monetary arrangements and modify their restrictions upon foreign exchanges, which in turn hinder trade movements and foster the use of restrictive bilateral trade arrangements.

The unshackling of trade and the restoration of conditions permitting trade and payments to move through immensely diverse world-wide channels, in place of the bilateral arrangements which now hedge and restrict the purchasing power of large parts of the world, would also restore effective access of all to the raw materials which they need and which wait on their purchasing power.

Today the economy of great parts of the world is upon a war basis rather than upon a sound economic basis. Economic nationalism and economic isolation, when carried to their logical end, require complete control of production and prices, regimentation and dictatorship. They can only achieve less production, less consumption, ever-increasing doles, and lower levels of existence for the people. Under these policies, international relations rest largely on selfishness, discrimination and force. These are conditions that breed the fear of war that haunts the world, and that breed the spirit of war that threatens all we hold dear. Chaos lies down that road.

I have endeavored to describe a basic alternative policy. Restoration of a freer movement of international trade and greater access of the peoples to all the resources of the world is the indicated road from the threat of war to the hope of peace. The substitution of the principle of equal treatment for the practice of discrimination would be a cornerstone of sound world policy. To some extent, our trade agreements already operate both as a material and moral stabilizer, and their principle and police would but a wider adoption by the great commercial nations of the world to become a tremendous practical force tending toward better conditions. In this, as in other aspects, the foreign policy of the United States through recent years has steadily led toward appeasement and peace.

Shadow of War Darkens the World

The times are serious. The shadow of war darkens the world. It was never more important for the people to exhibit breadth of vision, restraint, judgment and political foresight, rather than passion, selfishness, emotion and credulity.

The world needs a return to belief in the pledged word, in a reign of law rather than unlicensed force, in the supreme value of human rights and liberties. Unbridled cupidity and savage aggression are sooner or later self-defeating. But those who dare to maintain their unshakable faith in individual and international morality, drawn together by their common faith, must make bold assertion of it and translate that faith into their day-to-day activities. It will not do for those nations which desire peace merely to cry peace and sit with hands meekly folded. If peace is to be made secure, we must build the kind of foundations upon which enduring peace can rest. We must create the kind of economic world future which allows national populations to maintain adequate standards of living, and which encourages men to look forward to achievement in the peaceful arts of commerce, invention, and the betterment of living conditions.

This Government has recently reiterated its determination to adhere to these principles and, without entering into alliances or entangling commitments, to give them our full support in any co-operative effort to establish them by peaceful and practical means. Numerous other countries have expressed their like determination to work toward making these principles the realities of international life. This affords hope that in spite of the serious difficulties which stand in the way, the world will move in the direction of peace and economic sanity, rather than in the direction of economic warfare and armed hostilities.

Sunken Road Restored To War-Period State

The excavation of the Sunken Road in Shiloh National Military Park, Tenn., which had been filled in gradually by rubbish and soil until it was barely visible, has been completed by CCC enrollees, it was announced yesterday. The road is now in the condition which made it a natural trench for Federal soldiers during the Battle of Shiloh in 1862.

Workers have excavated the road to its original depth of from 12 to 15 feet. Markers will be established to show where it connected with the roads between Pittsburg Landing and Corinth and between Hamburg and Savannah. It is 1,263 yards long.

Forgotten Men

A. F. G. E.'s President Stengle whets his lance and flashes it once again for a small group of forgotten men—the guards in the District Jail. Many others have variously wheedled, cajoled or lambasted for these same forgotten men, but the guards still work seven days a week.

Now Stengle flashes into action again—this time with a manifesto to the District Commissioners, setting forth the conditions at the bastille and begging to be heard on the issue.

"For several years past I have appeared before both committees of Congress having to do with appropriations for the District of Columbia and have implored them to rectify a most unbearable situation in the D. C. Jail," he says, adding that to date no relief has been given.

The guards, he says, work seven days a week. "They do not even have time to leave their place for lunch. They have no place to go for lunch even if they had a chance to." And "You will find as bad prisoners in that jail as you do in the penitentiaries. The mental strain that a guard has to undergo certainly makes him deserving of as fair treatment as given guards in our national penitentiaries," he argued.

The jail force consists of 29 guards and 5 matrons. These employes are required to supervise the prisoners 24 hours a day. The daily average number of inmates in the jail last year was 586; during the year 18,228 prisoners were committed. The number of guards and matrons is so small that a full weeks' work is required, Stengle states.

"I wish further to direct this committee's attention to the fact that the majority of these guards, working as they do seven days a week, receive a salary of only $1,500 per year. It is submitted that such a salary is not commensurate with the exacting and dangerous nature of the work in which they are engaged . . . The employes of the jail, with the exception of one guard, who is acting as captain, have not received a stepup in salary since the Walsh act in 1928," he stated.

He pointed out that guards in the Federal Bureau of Prisons enter that service at a minimum of $1,860. "It is my contention that they should receive the same salary as employes in the Federal Bureau of Prisons. However, in view of the financial situation of the District, such is not insisted upon at this time.

"I do feel, however, that the least that can be done for them is to give them one stepup, within their grades. This surely would impose but very little additional burden upon the District's revenue," he argued.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

Copyright, 1937, for The Washington Post

A young Government official who has just returned from a tour of the South announces that he is writing a sequel to "Gone With the Wind." . . . It will be called "Not Enough Went With the Wind."

• • • •

Among the things which, he will contend, should have gone with the wind this damyankee will devote a chapter apiece to Dixie drinks, Southern cooking, Dixie debs and old Southern gentlemen. . . . Traces of bitterness there . . . Wait till the Dixie statesmen look him up!

• • • •

An antitheft gadget on a parked car kept making a funny noise like a bronx cheer through the early part of President Roosevelt's last speech . . . Finally a stalwart officer disconnected the wires which connected the noisemaker . . . But not before hundreds of people suspected there was a Republican concealed in the shrubbery.

• • • •

In further illustration of the ball-and-chain which drags on Government correspondence, I cite the case of the Washington underofficial who was going to inspect a front-line trench of the New Deal. Four days before his departure an associate wrote a letter tipping off the field official of the impending visit, so he could do the honors.

The letter, naturally, went through official channels, and when the underofficial arrived in the field, somewhere in Jersey, he was unexpected, was not met, and felt a little miffed. . . . Eventually, after he had returned to Washington, he learned that the letter did not reach the field office until four days after his visit.

• • • •

Our Ambassador to Spain divides his time between a gunboat and the French resorts of Biarritz and St. Jean de Luz . . . Now our Ambassador to China has boarded a gunboat and hopes to reach a place symbollically called Wuhu, pronounced Wee-hoo . . . Maybe we ought to supply our Ambassadors with blimps so they could hover the lands they're accredited to!

• • • •

Occasionally some patriot tries to pick up a dishonest penny by selling a bit of information to a foreign government . . . Such an overture came recently to a foreign military attache, with a demand for payment in advance . . . He played it cagy, and discovered a military secret: That a captain in the Quartermaster Corps has recently bought a new .22 rifle . . .The tidbit didn't cost him a dime.

• • • •

Another of my favorite inventions on view at the Patent Office is a life boat shaped like a big wine cask with a conning tower. It was the masterpiece of a sea-going New Englander; very jolly in appearance, but apparently would have to be emptied partially before it could save many lives.

• • • •

One young Government official claims he spent $25 for taxi fares last month for which he was not reimbursed, racing to conferences and getting documents signed . . . Uncle Sam doesn't pay your car or taxi fares inside the city limits.

"—a jolly invention"

Maybe Justice Black has unwittingly rendered his first judicial opinion—that Senatorial courtesy is a lot of tommyrot . . . If a Bilbo were ever appointed to another job clipping newspapers I'll bet his Senatorial pals would go over him with fine-tooth comb . . . Maybe we have seen the end of that fine old tuberose, Senatorial Courtesy, itSs final plucking.

• • • •

Somehow the rumor spread at some of the high schools yesterday that from now on pupils will get top marks for not doing their algebra; part of the more abundant life . . .

• • • •

When Government men with roving assignments chat over their coffee and expense accounts they like to tell the tale of the United States official in San Francisco who frequently found it necessary to go to Denver, where on several occasions it became vital to go on to Albuquerque, N. Mex., on important Government business.

• • • •

But after discovering, through bitter experience, how impossible it was to collect his traveling expenses from Denver to Albuquerque when he was supposed to be starting from San Francisco, he has become a wiser but a slower official . . . Now when he's in Denver and finds it necessary to go to Albuquerque, he returns to San Francisco first (1,000 miles out of his way) and then starts for Albuquerque from scratch.

'This Place Is O.K.—but How About Some Sugar'

After living in one place for 24 years Jumbina, 9,000-pound elephant, was moved yesterday into a new cage, a mural-jungle of her native Egypt. She rubbed her trunk over the trees then begged Keeper A. B. Norris for a lump of sugar (above).

Loveless Heads SixteenthStreet Citizens Again

Samuel B. Loveless last night was re-elected president of the Sixteenth Street Heights Citizens Asciation at its first meeting of the year at Shepherd School.

Other officers re-elected were: James I. Turner, secretary; Mrs. Hugh Smith, financial secretary; Joseph H. Wilson, treasurer. C. H. Ritenour succeeded Earle W. Sapp as vice president. Sapp had declined the nomination. The officers, along with James R. Kirkland, Oliver E. Sweet and Dr. William H. England, will serve on the executive committee.

Principal business was discussion of efforts to obtain a firehouse for the area. A resolution, calling for such action, was adopted.

Two Members Elected.

L. O. Drumright, 1306 Floral street, and Frederick H. Pitzer, 1310 Floral street, were elected members.

The proposal that a metropolitan unit—comprising the District, and nearby Virginia and Maryland—be formed for unified water, police and fire protection administration, last night was called "impractical" at a meeting of the Interfederation Conference of Citizens Associations in the United States Chamber of Commerce Building.

A committee was named to study the plan, whose lone supporter was J. B. Matre, delegate from Montgomery County. Matre said, "Something like this (plan) is inevitable."

Plan Called Fantastic.

Miss Elaine Eppley, a District delegate, called the plan "fantastic," adding, "It couldn't be worked out to save its life." Judge A. D. Bailey, of Prince Georges County, added that "It's impractical until you in the District get the vote." A third delegate stated, "There is no possibility of accomplishing it under present conditions."

Other business considered concerned a tribute to Oliver Owen Kuhn, late leader of the Citizens Associations movement, which will be presented at the next meeting. Civil Service conditions in the counties and the District were discussed. Arlington County delegates registered protests against the milk situation in their area.

Officer Is Sought In Operation Case

Alleged to have aided an illegal operation, Policeman Jeff Henry, attached to the Ninth Precint, was being sought last night by his former fellow officers. The search was being led by Detective Sergeant Daniel Jones.

Henry was named in a warrant sworn out by an 18-year-old girl. The girl said he had deserted her after arranging for the illegal operation.

The policeman was off duty at the time the warrant was obtained Sunday night, and failed to return to duty at 8 a. m. yesterday. His name is being carried as that of a deserter on police roll books.

Wife Exclaims 'No!' Fisherman Returns Shark to Potomac

Somewhere in the Potomac floats a young shark which came to an untimely end because of its fondness for shrimp.

J. A. Liverett, of Glenn Echo Heights, Md., was just about as surprised as the shark when he pulled the 25½-inch creature onto the bank of the Tidal Basin where he was fishing with shrimp bait yesterday at 7:30 a. m. With pardo. able pride he showed the catch to his wife when he returned home at 5 p. m., and suggested she cook it for his supper.

Mrs. Liverett took one look at the shark, uttered a low moan of disgust and said "Heavens no"

So Liverett, slightly crestfallen, organized an informal procession of mourners and bore the shark to the shore of the Potomac, near Sycamore Island. It was the first shark he had caught and probably the first shark ever to be caught in the Tidal Basin. His only source of satisfaction was that he probably is the first man to toss a shark into the Potomac.

Jumbina, a 9,000-pound Egyptian elephant lass, yesterday proved she was a lady to her trunk tip, though she caused the Zoo to close its gates to the public for the first time in its 47 years of history.

All day long more than a dozen workmen strained to move the 26-year-old daughter of the Nile to the new, artistically painted pachyderm home. Keepers enticed her into a huge cage of oak, mounted on a platform at the rear of the elephant's old home. The cage alone weighed 11,000 pounds. At last it slid away on rollers and the elephant bade good-by with gesture of her trunk to the only home she had known for 24 years.

The hard work really started when the cage swung in front of the new pachyderm house. Deep moats surround the house. And from the road outside to Jumbina's back door was a 40-foot yawning chasm. Motors churned, cables groaned. Men shouted, others hammered. The giant box swayed and heaved now to one side, now to the other. But Jumbina's patience was still stoic. She could take it.

There were other things to test her patience. Through her wired window she could look out and see Col. H. P. Shelton, big game hunter. The colonel sported an ugly elephant gun—just in case.

Over a bridge of lumber they finally pulled the crate to introduce Jumbina's back to the cameramen awaiting her inside her home. Warily at first, then with more confidence, she backed through the now opened trap door and into her cage. She stomped her feet, rubbed her trunk over the gaily painted murals, then advanced to the bars of her cage for some sugar.

"She was only shoulder high then," he said yesterday as he wached how his now giant charge took to her new surroundings. "She must like it," he added, "else she would be talking plenty about it."

The only other elephant, 21-year-old Ketchel, fretted and moved about in the old house as the moving offensive went on. She will be moved later, but Zoo officials could not say just when.

Labor Group Asks 2 Drivers On Buses, Cars

Indorsement of a bill, submitted in the last Congress by Representative E. M. Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, requiring that all street cars and buses seating over 30 passengers, have two operators, was voted last night by the Central Labor Union. More than 150 members attended the meeting at the Typographical Temple.

Recommendations of the education committee, urging that certain problems concerned with vocational education be discussed at the national convention of the A. F. of L. in Denver, Colo., on October 4, also were approved in a resolution.

Stating that "the development of a truly social program of vocational education is handicapped by the attitude of the superintendent of schools, and with the approval of the Board of Education," the resolution provided that: 1. The national convention take full cognizance of social implications of a program in vocational education. 2. That the special committee, appointed to make a survey of education in the District, be required to expose all facts and data which would reveal to the public the antisocial policy of school officers in connection with vocational education, and, 3. That Congressional action, necessary to effect the desired changes in the educational system, be sought."

Action Parallels Suggestion for 'Metropolitan District.'

Seeking closer co-operation between authorities in the District, suburban Maryland and Virginia, Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen last night announced he would call a conference of the chiefs of fire and police departments in Prince Georges and Montgomery counties, in Maryland, and Alexandria and Arlington and Fairfax counties, in Virginia. Mayors and other officials also would be invited.

Action of Hazen followed closely a recommendation of the National Resources Committee for a "Greater Washington," in which an integrated metropolitan government might be devised, embracing the District and nearby Maryland and Virginia.

Police Power Topic.

Hazen said he had had the idea of such a conference in mind for some time, but publication of the committee's recommendations in The Post spurred him to take the matter of the conference up as soon as possible.

Recoprocal police authority will be a topic.

Meanwhile, Hazen called the recommendation of the committee, which was on file with President Roosevelt, "fantastic." He stated he believed it would take an amendment to the Constitution to enlarge the District so that its authority would include the areas mentioned in the recommendation.

He continued that it would certainly be necessary for the legislatures of Virginia and Maryland to vote their territories to the District.

Report Given Ickes.

That a constitutional amendment would be necessary to enlarge the District, was the opinion of Dr. Robert F. Maurer, professor of constitutional law at Georgetown University.

The committee's report was forwarded the President by Secretary of the Interior Ickes. It pointed out that Washington's metropolitan territory embraces 26 towns outside the District.

Would-Be Fireman And Pal Seized in $1,000,000 Fraud

While one of them attempted to escape detection as a member of the District Fire Department, two New York City lawyers who are alleged to have mulcted nearly $1,000,000 from accident victims in damage suits during the last five years were seized here yesterday.

Admitting their identity and agreeing to waive extradition, the men were lodged in the Twelfth Precinct Station as fugitives from justice. They will be turned over to New York City authorities this morning. One of the men, police learned, took the Civil Service examination for the local fire department and came out third on the list, sometime next month. The men came to Washington about three He was scheduled to be appointed months ago.

School Credit Unit ExpansionPlanned

A plan to organize a Federal Credit Union for all employes of the District public school system, Divisions 1 to 9, inclusive, will be inaugurated shortly.

The organization, which is under the supervision of the Farm Credit Administration of the Department of Agriculture, was started last spring just before the close of the school and was intended as banking and loan institution for its membership which includes administrative officers, teachers, clerks and custodians in elementary, junior and senior high schools. The Franklin Administration Building has been chosen as a central point where business is conducted by the treasurer, Elbert Y. Olney.

Richard Carl Thoreen, 37, of 839 Kennedy street northwest, was found dea last night in the hall of a Gallinger Hospital building, apparently killed by a glow on the head received when he stumbled and fell against a radiator.

Thoreen was taken to the hospital September 15 for observation for a mental condition, authorities said.

Numbers Runner Stabbed to Death; Woman Gives Up

A colored woman paced the corridor of the Second Precinct police station last night and after a few minutes a policeman asked her what she wanted. She replied, according to police:

"I think I got my boy friend."

Police, going to the address given, an alley in the rear of 1341 T street northwest, found Clyde Brady, 34, identified as a numbers runner, lying dead of a knife wound in the chest.

26% of Reformatory Inmates Afflicted by Venereal Diseases

Lone Lorton Physician Treats 419 Cases Daily; He Has Hospital, but Occoquan Doctor Lacks Facilities.

Approximately 26 per cent of all prisoners admitted to the District Reformatory at Lorton, Va., are found to be suffering from venereal diseases. An average of 419 cases each week is treated by Dr. Frank R. Klune, youthful graduate of the University of Minnesota.

In a model hospital, fully equipped with modern devices and facilities, Dr. Klune works against terrific odds to combat the institution's greatest medical problem. His staff is inadequate. He has no trained personnel.

Segregation Impossible.

At the Workhouse in Occoquan, Dr. Raymond Maret faces an even graver problem. He is even without facilities to determine accurately which inmates are suffering from contagious or infectious diseases.

Prisoners at the Workhouse, serving short 10 and 15 day terms, must mingle with germ-carrying fellow-inmates because suitable facilities for segregation do not exist.

In his recent annual report to the Board of Public Welfare, General Superintendent Ray L. Huff described the Workhouse and District Jail as a source of contagion for not only venereal diseases but tuberculosis.

Treat 10,141 Cases.

At this institution, 30 beds are jammed into a space meant originally for 16, records at the Reformatory show.

Last year, Dr. Klune treated a total of 10,141 venereal disease cases. Dr. Klune estimates he has given 40,000 injections for venereal diseases in his 3-year service as hospital head.

And in addition to this work, the Reformatory's only physician must give routine examinations and answer regular sick calls. His report shows that 54,566 patients passed through the hospital last year—or an average of 149 each day.

Superintendent Huff has asked the Board of Public Welfare for increased medical facilities at the jail and workhouse and a larger staff to work with Dr. Klune at the Reformatory.

ProgramAsks Wider Power For District

Six-Point Proposal Also Urges Merit System for D. C.

A six-point new legislative program for the District is being drafted by Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal, he disclosed yesterday.

First on the list is the perennial bill to broaden the powers of the District Commissioners. Officials, however, are hopeful that some legislation of this character will be enacted at the next session of Congress because of the threefold interest.

Senator King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, has pledged himself to push the reorganization plan and studies are being made by Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, chairman of the local tax subcommittee last year, and by a committee of residents headed by E. Barrett Prettyman, former corporation counsel.

Seal said the legislation the Commissioners will propose, as yet undrafted, probably will include the major proposals for bringing the Board of Education, all municipal recreational agencies, the Board of Public Welfare and other independent groups under the direct administration of the Commissioners.

One new plank in the platform is a plan to ask the Federal Government to pay for the upkeep of World War veteran "floaters" whom the District now has to support.

A third legislative proposal is to set up a District civil service system, with an administrative commission, to place all municipal employees on a merit basis.

Senator King has promised to promote this legislation also.

A fourth major legislative plank is the new or revised tax program, which will be drawn up this fall.

At the request of chairman Palmisano, of the House District Committe, Seal is drafting a bill to enable the Commissioners to submit the municipal budget directly to Congress rather than via the Budget Bureau.

District Merchant Accused as Fence For $20,000 Loot

Accused of being the "fence" for a youthful Baltimore burglar gang charged with the theft of $20,000 in merchandise, a District second-hand merchant will appear today in Police Court on three charges in connection with the disposal of part of the loot.

Arrested by Detective Sergt. Clyde N. Strange, the man gave his name as Henry Leish, 32, of the 600 block N street northwest. Lieut. Clement P. Cox said the man probably will be turned over to Maryland authorities.

Leish's arrest came after Baltimore police seized five youths and two women in a roundup of the gang. Two of the men were seized with a truck loaded with $2,000 worth of copper stolen here.

Police last night were holding Leish on $20,000 bond on charges of receiving stolen property, failing to make the proper property returns and bringing stolen property into the District

Woman Gets Year In Shoplifting Case

Joan Branden, 29, no fixed address, was sentenced to a year in jail yesterday when she was arraigned before Police Court Judge Hobart Newman on five shoplifting charges.

Following her arraignment, she was taken before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage and ordered held for the garnd jury under $1,000 bond on two charges in connection with the sale and possession of narcotics. Miss Branden recently was released from Lorton for shoplifting.

Detectives Charles Mansfield and Dan Jones arrested the woman several days ago and charged her with violating the Harrison and Jones-Miller narcotic laws. They said she had a small amount of heroin in her possession.

Grocery Manager Hangs Self Here

Placing a handkerchief between the rope and his skin for a cushion, Everett Embrey, 31, manager of a grocery store, hanged himself in the kitchen of his apartment yesterday at 515 Sixteenth street southeast.

Coroner A. Magruder McDonald said a certificate of suicide will be issued.

Conveniton Will Follow A. F. of L. Parley by Week.

John L. Lewis last night summoned the heads of all the international and national labor unions affiliated with his Committee for Industrial Organization to meet in Atlantic City one week after the rival American Federation of Labor opens its national convention in Denver. The C. I. O. sessions will start October 11.

A drive has been planned by numerous leaders of the A. F. of L. to bring about expulsion at the convention, of all the C. I. O. unions, now under suspension from the Federation, but Lewis' announcement of his own meeting made no reference to that possibility. It said merely that the meeting would "canvass the work of the organization and consider reports on its administrative affairs and policies."

Charter Restored.

Meanwhile, President William Green of the A. F. of L., marking another step in the warfare between the two huge labor organizations, announced restoration of an A. F. of L. charter to the International Spinners Union, which was suspended in 1919 after it had refused to amalgamate with the United Textile Workers, an industrial union now aligned with the Lewis forces.

"This was a striking instance," Green's announcement said, "of the efforts of the A. F. of L. to promote industrial unions, even under the strenuous objections of a craft organization, when conditions warranted such a course."

To Drop Guild Units.

Restoration of the Spinners Union charter will give the federation a nucleus for a possible invasion of the widespread textile field, in which the C. I. O. is now conducting an extensive drive under direction of Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

The Lewis organization is based on the industrial union idea, the A. F. of L. on the uniting of workers by crafts.

Green also called on officials of State federations and city central labor bodies to drop locals of the American Newspaper Guild, which has voted to affiliate with the C. I. O. He announced, at the same time, a drive to organize editorial and news writers into A. F. of L. unions. It is the purpose of the federation, Green said, "to assign special experienced and capable organizers to specialize in organizaton work among editorial and news writers," who will be accorded "the full support" of the A. F. of L., State federations of labor and city central bodies.

C. I. O. Wins Three Victories.

The C. I. O. yesterday won certification as the exclusive bargaining agency for employes of three plants in two orders issued by the National Relations Board.

The Textile Workers Organizing Committee, after receiving 942 of 1,307 ballots cast, was held to be the bargaining agency for employes at the New Orleans plant of the Lane Cotton Mills Co. The United Butchers, Meat Cutters and Packers, Local 105, another C. I. O. affiliate, was designated as the agency for employes of Klinck Packing Co., Inc., and Jacob Dold Co., both of Buffalo, N. Y. Among the Dold employes 591 voted for the United and 161 against, while 111 Klinck workers voted for the C. I. O. unit and 79 against.

Hosiery Purchasers Warned of Fraud Deals

Washington housewives were warned yesterday against a man representing himself as a salesman for a hosiery mill in Greenfield, Ohio. The Better Business Bureau announced that the salesman, after quoting unusually low prices, takes orders for expensive samples from women, who later receive a cheaper grade of hose.

THE OTHER WOMAN LIVES JUST AROUND THE CORNER

IT may seem unreasonable, but most men cannot understand why a woman who is usually happy and loving should have recurring periods when her whole character seems changed. He cannot appreciate the distress, the discomfort that all women must endure. He does not know what it is to do housework with an aching back and failing energy. All he does know is that other women seem more cheerful by comparison.

Are you such a three-quarter wife?

Don't let the ordeals that all women face cause you avoidable discomfort or endanger your home. Do as so many wise women have —try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three ordeals of life: 1. Turning from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Approaching "middle age."

Wounded Suspect In Holdup Seized After 2-Day Hunt

A wounded colored man, who police say confessed six holdups of small groceries late Saturday, last night was arrested after a two-day search.

The prisoner was found in a rooming house at 1430 T street northwest. He gave his name as Charles T. Wooden, 27, and was taken to Gallinger Hospital under police guard.

Wooden is alleged to be the second of the trio of colored men who perpetrated the holdups, netting about $300. One companion, Leroy Burkley, 20, 1700 block of Thirteenth street northwest, was captured during the attempted holdup at the Concord Pharmacy, New Hampshire and Oregon avenues northwest.

At that time Detectives Harry Britton and Joseph Shimon fired twice at a man alleged to be Wooden, wounding him in the leg. He and a companion, waiting outside in a car, escaped. The companion is still being sought by police.

Wooden was captured, police say, after several doctors reported a colored girl had asked them to treat a man for gunshot wounds without notifying the police.

Traffic Safety Classes Start At Maryland U.

7 D. C. Policemen Among 50 Officers Taking 2-Week Course.

Seven members of the Metropolitan Police Department registered as "freshmen" at the University of Maryland yesterday to study scientific methods of accident prevention and traffic control.

From 8:20 a. m. until 5 p. m. each day during the next two weeks, they will join 50 other enforcement officers from neighboring States and counties in learning modern highway safety systems.

The future classes at the police school here, the now student officers will pass their knowledge to other members of the department in an effort to bring Washington a new safety record next year.

Wallace L. Braun, traffic engineer of the Baltimore City Police Department, speaking at a mid-day luncheon meeting, traced the history of "sudden death" from the first automobile in 1893.

It was not until 1924, he said, that the traffic problem first became acute. During that year approximately 20,000 persons were killed in auto crashes, he declared. The riding and walking public, Braun said, then began voicing protest and demanding action.

Of first importance in ultimate achievement of safety said Braun, is the driver—his ability to operate a car and keep it in safe running order. Next comes the auto —its defects and mechanical condition. And finally, with increasing importance, the highway and its construction.

The driver, through various types of actions, is responsible for the majority of our accidents, said Braun. Paramount among these actions, he said, is inattention, slow reaction to emergencies, bad eyesight, nervous complexes behind the wheel and drunken driving.

The Nation's roads, Braun declared, have not kept pace with modern motoring trends. Dangerous curves, unlighted hills and rough construction rate high among accident causes.

Engineering has taken greater strides in recent years and authorities have recognized the necessity of future planning, he said. Education, if it is to bring results, should start in the schools, the meeting was told, because it is easier to educate youngsters than adults.

Enforcement still remains the greatest weapon, said the instructor. If education and engineering fail to promote safety, it falls to the police to remove dangerous drivers from the highways.

Capt. Milton D. Smith, traffic division commander; Capt. Arthur Miller, Third Precinct; Capt. Harvey Callahan, First Precinct; Capt. Lloyd Kelly, Eighth Precinct; Lieut. W. T. Storm, police school; and Pvts. W. L. Bingswanger and H. E. Caranfa, traffic division.

Concrete Issues Urged by SEC In Utility Cases

Academic Ruling Would Throw Partisan Strife on Court, Brief Says.

By Russell Smith

The Second Circuit Court of Appeals should decline to pass upon constitutionality of the holding company act until "concrete issues" are presented to it, because such a ruling "would go far to discredit the judicial process, and would throw upon the judiciary the full impact of bitter partisan and political strife," the Securities and Exchange Commission contended yesterday.

Nevertheless, it argued in a brief, filed with the court in opposition to an appeal of the Electric Bond & Share Co., and made public here, the court should uphold the validity of the registration provisions of the act. If the Circuit Court followed the Government's recommendation in each instance, it would thereby affirm the decision of Federal Judge Julian W. Mack.

Asserting that only the requirement that utilities register is in controversy in the case, the SEC, in the brief signed by Attorney General Homer S. Cummings and Assistant Attorney General Robert H. Jackson, warned that "courts are not concerned with political or partisan issues as such; and to force upon the courts the review of legislation as such, severed from the concreteness of a vital controversy" is dangerous.

"The judicial process is not 'a brooding omnipresence in the sky,'" the brief observed. "The ultimate protection afforded by the great Constitutional guarantees is to be found not in general and sweeping declarations of the courts based upon hypothetical controversies, but in actual and precise adjudications of public and private right."

Still on the question of the scope of the proceedings, the SEC also said that Electric bond & Share "pyramided . . . empire was built up and maintained with other people's money," and that it is a "financial enterprise" which has maintained "control over a major part of the great utility industry . . . with a relatively small amount of its own funds."

Of the registration provisions, the SEC said:

"The dangers of the holding company form and the persistent and recurring evidence of abuses of the holding company form in the utility field are such as to justify the exercise by the Congress of virtually the same power over utility holding companies in interstate commerce or using the mails as it has over situations involving fraud, deceit or monopoly as to which it has exercised and the Supreme Court has sustained the widest measure of prohibition and control.

The brief also was signed by Allen E. Throop, general counsel of the SEC, and by Thomas G. Corcoran and Benjamin V. Cohen, the special assistants to the Attorney General widely regarded as the White House's intimate advisers.

Artemas Ward Marker Plans, Site Approved

Work on Monument to War Hero to Start Next Week.

Construction of a memorial to Artemas Ward, Revolutionary War hero, at Ward Circle, Massachusetts and Nebraska avenues, was approved yesterday by C. Marshall Finnan, superintendent of the National Capital Parks.

The newly-completed traffic circle near American University was named in honor of the famous son of Massachusetts.

Contract for the construction of the base and pedestal was awarded to the J. F. Manning Co., of Washington, who will start work next week. The foundation will be of reinforced concrete and granite from Stony Creek, Conn., will be used for the pedestal.

The sculptor, Leonard Crunelle, of Chicago, who was selected for the work on the basis of a national competition, has been at work on the figure for three years.

Erection of the memorial was made possible by the president and fellows of Harvard College, who allotted $50,000 toward the cost.

Artemas Ward, 1727-1800, son of Massachusetts, graduate of Harvard College, judge and legislator, Delegate 1780-81 Continental Congress, soldier in three wars, first commander of the Patriotic forces.

Construction of the foundation will require about three months, Finnan announced.

Text of Hull's Legion Talk

It is my privilege tonight to bring to you of the American Legion personal greetings from the Chief Executive of our Nation. The President regrets his inability to be with you in person, to reminisce with you over the events of 20 years ago and to discuss the pressing problems of the present day. He has asked me, however, to tell you that he is following your convention with keen interest. He is ready, as always, to give serious consideration to your suggestions and resolutions.

You represent a great cross-section of American life. You embrace all races, creeds and colors. Joined by the bond of common service during the World War, you have associated yourselves in a patiotic organization that transcends partisanship and has only the well being of our great Nation in view.

If I talk to you for a few brief minutes tonight about the international situation, it is not primarily to tell you what we have done these past four or five years, but to sketch for you the world situation as I see it, and to outline some of the problems that confront us.

Believed Selves On New Threshold

You can all remember the hope that was in our hearts when the armistice was declared. We believed that we were on the threshold of a new world, and that the old discords, greeds and bigotries had once and for all been destroyed. We pictured the commencement of an era, with the passions of the war gradually subsiding, and with a growing realization that each nation stood to gain by the prosperity of other countries. We envisaged a rising standard of living, a liberalization of legislation, an increasing flow of trade, a growth in mutual confidences, and an abiding respect for the pledged word. And now, less than 20 years later, these hopes have almost turned to ashes. We s: that in all too many sections of the world the standard of living is being lowered, democracy is being supplanted by other types of government, trade is being stifled, fears and suspicions are rampant, and even treaties—the most solemn interchanges of nations' promises—are being torn to shreds. The world as we see it today bears scant resemblance to the world we all longed for—to the world which you members of the legion felt you fought for.

But it would be doing an ill-service merely to point out symptom after symptom of international deterioration. It is only of use if we can draw from it certain lessons which will help us to avoid a new catastrophe, one which might well engulf the civilization we have built up through centuries of patient effort. We must look at it not from the point of view of despair but as a challenge to constructive statesmanship.

Peace Must Always Be Goal of All

Peace must always be our goal: not peace for ourselves alone, but peace throughout the world, for nations today are so interdependent that the repercussions of war affect neutrals only a few degrees less than they affect belligerents. The dislocation of the whole economic structure, the artificial expansion in war industries, the abnormal prices paid for key products, the strain on currencies, the destruction of capital—all these affect nations thousands of miles from the scene of actual conflicts. Peace is not only the goal of the idealist; it is at the same time the cornerstone of international self-preservation.

What can we do to help? I believe that we can do more than in any other way by avoiding the two extremes of policy. One extreme would be utter isolation, which would mean closing our eyes to the realities of the world today and assuming, like the courtiers of King Canute, that the rising tide of international anarchy can be stopped before it reaches us; the other extreme would be a kind of internationalism, which would mean abdicating our independence of judgment, abandoning our traditional policy of nonentanglement and being drawn into the rivalries and disputes of other nationals. No, neither of these extremes offers us a solution. We must draw the best from each and follow a middle course. This I have termed enlightened nationalism.

Reviews U. S. Role In Peace Drives

Let us review our role for a moment and see if we have in fact been taking this course and, at the same time doing our full part in lightening the burden and easing the fears from which the world is suffering. We have taken part in every effort for disarmament and are prepared today to lend our full weight in any genuine renewal of a drive to limit and reduce the bankrupting burden of arms. We are negotiating a series of treaties designed to reduce the excessive barriers to world trade, in order to restore to its natural flow commerce that has been artificially diverted or obstructed. We have assisted in the stabilization of currencies through the Tripartite Agreement. We have restated the principles on which normal international intercourse is based, at a time when discouragement was rife and when nations were forgetting their pledged word in the pursuit of contrary policies. We have avoided involvement in the disputes of others, and yet shown that we demand respect for our rights and safety for our nationals. We have made it clear that while we are resolved by every means to avoid war, we are not and can not be indifferent to policies that lead to war, or to instances of international lawlessness that disturb the peace.

These policies I have listed are but a few of the landmarks on the road we are following; it is not always easy to avoid a turn-off, but if we keep to this road without faltering, and if other nations in their own way will follow similar paths, then the youthful generation throughout the world today will be spared the experiences you had to live through two decades ago.

There is one other thought I would leave with you tonight, and that is to emphasize the price we all attach to keeping our American traditions and beliefs untouched. We are a young country, with infusions of blood from many nations of the world, often with conflicting philosophies and divergent senses of value. And it has been the genius of America that instead of losing vitality from a mixture of these different elements, we have drawn new strength from them, and merged them into a single nation, having its own tradition, its own beliefs and its own institutions. Men who have come to our shores and settled in our midst have not looked backward to the lands from which they have come, but forward to their future and their children's future in the United States.

They have become an integral part of us, anxious to adopt our ways, to think our thoughts, to acquire our tolerance, and to share in our national life. If ever our population of foreign birth should put America second, if ever it should subordinate American interests to the interests of some other country, by accepting directions given by governments or political parties abroad, then indeed a situation would arise that would fill us with foreboding.

You, members of the American Legion, learned by experience and sacrifice, as perhaps no other group, the true meaning of the American ideal. You can hold high the torch, in case others should forget. You can impart knowledge to those who wish to learn the true meaning of our beliefs. And you have a still greater opportunity, for as during the war you helped to forge new traditions for us, you can by precept in time of peace carry on the work of perfecting our Americanism.

Legion Urged Again to Fight For Democracy

New York, Sept. 20.—In the high emotion of two decades ago, the American Legion was called today to fight again—for democracy, for liberty, and for peace.

Twenty thousand men, 19 years out of the khaki of a more stirring day, sat in Madison Square Garden's lofty auditorium to open their annual convention—and the memory of a war President dead now this half a generation was stirred again in what the speakers said.

Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York, welcomed them, but not as men with a job all done since the eleventh day of November, 1918.

As Woodrow Wilson had cried out to them 20 years ago that they must "make the world safe for democracy," Lehman summoned them anew to an old campaign:

"We still have a great principle of democracy and liberty for which we must fight."

"'For God and country'"—he quoted the legion's constitutional preamble—"'we associate ourselves together to make right the master of might; to promote peace and good will on earth; to safeguard and transmit to posterity the principles of justice, freedom and democracy.'"

"America gasps in horror," he said, "when it sees great groups of people abroad persecuted solely because of race or religion."

John R. Quinn, of California, a former national commander, in response, said, democracy "is in greater danger today than when we tried to save it in 1918."

"We are hoping and praying for victory in the battle against plots against democracy today."

To the thousands in the auditorium, Gen. John J. Pershing, the commander of the A. E. F. the legendary "Black Jack" to a million doughboys who never saw him, sent his greetings.

Memorial services for the war dead were broadcast to the convention from Arlington National Cemetery, at Washington.

Gayety of Armistice.

Outside the hall, after this first grave session, there was such a gusty air of playfulness and lusty celebration as this old city had not seen since armistice. Two hundred and thirty thousand more legionnaires were outside that hall.

There were drum corps contests, glee club marathons, receptions, teas, various musical contests and there was, too, the jovial arrival in harbor of part of the Atlantic Fleet.

The women who were behind the men who were behind the guns—members of the American Legion Auxiliary—opened their own convention today amid a blaze of color and patriotic speech-making. The national president, Mrs. Oscar W. Hann, of Wayne, Nebr., and United States Senator Dixie Graves, of Alabama, were speakers.

light blue coats, thumping out "Carolina Moon."

"Head Engineer" Rides Barouche.

First, in a bravely polished open barouche, came Chef de Chemin de Fer (Head Engineer of the Whole Works) Harry E. Ransom, of Wisconsin, along with Parade Marshal Pelham St. George Bissell, of New York, and Ransom hopped out to assume his reviewing duties as the line passed the stand.

Everywhere in the line of march the colors of the allied nations bobbed in the breeze.

The boxcar of Voiture No. 1, of Philadelphia—the city where the 40 and 8 was formed—rolled along realistically enough. It was accompanied by such curious escorts as a wildly rouged and high-stepping pseudo lady, who, like many another in the procession, had curves of an ample excessiveness.

Ohio Parades Locomotive.

Ohio stormed by with a locomotive, along with which was a blonde young woman drum major.

Illinois had an incredibly shaped and colored flivver that jumped about like a brilliant bug.

The Indiana band, in deep maroon, blared out the song, "Back Home in Indiana."

The Californians, putting in an insistent bid for Los Angeles for next year's legion convention, put on a spectacular motorcycle snake dance; the Massachusetts section played a weird melody on giant pinto pony—stuffed—on the back of a decrepit automobile; West Virginians wore lighted trench caps; Minnesota had marchers in Indian costumes and a band in gilded football suits; Connecticut's men chose to come to the party as sheiks.

As the thing wound on and on, the Louisiana and Virginia delegations, marching toward the end, burst out with "Dixie" amid heavy applause.

Miss Crothers' New Comedy Is National Bill

By Nelson B. Bell.

THE CAST.

Michael O'Hara .....Paul McGrath

Susan Trexel .....Gertrude Lawrence

Leontine .....Katherine Deane

In "Susan and God," her latest comedy, in three acts and six scenes, presented by John Golden in the National Theater last night, Rachel Crothers has continued the intimate probing into domestic relationships pursued in her recent cycle of plays dealing with the married state among "smart" and intelligent people. It is not the most deftly wrought of the series.

While "When Ladies Meet" treated of the crisis that must inevitably occur when a philandering husband permits his affections to embrace two women, and "As Husbands Go" followed an inverse course by depicting the predicament in which a trusting husband discovered himself when an ardent admirer followed his wife home from Europe, the current work goes a step farther and involves the duties of parents not only to themselves but to their growing and adoring daughter, who has been shunted into the background of their lives by her mother's flightiness and her father's weakness for drink.

Out of the flittery application of a new-found theory of enlisting divine aid in righting the lives of all those about her there comes only disaster to the young woman who has encountered a new spiritual experience among a fashionable cult in England and attempts to adapt its uplifting powers not only to her friends but to her own immediate family.

Combines Divergent Elements.

In the concoction of this serio-comic dramatic potion, Miss Crothers has attempted to combine elements that do not easily blend. The draught becomes less frothy and more heavily glutinous as the bottom of the cup is reached. The gay and slightly clandestine enterprises of a group of literate and wealthy guests at a week-end party give way to something in the nature of introspective analysis as the events of the three acts progress to a culmination not difficult to foresee. The ultimate result is, roughly, two acts of brittle comedy and one of drama in its most serious aspects.

In direct proportion to the increasing depth of the play's argument, the number of characters concerned in each scene decreases until the final solution of the problem rests upon the shoulders of mother, father and daughter, with the mother bearing the brunt of the unhappy situation her ill-judged altruism has precipitated. The effect is that of an entire "change of pace," as the saying is, and an episode of considerable emotional comedy that started out to be a carnival of amusing country-house play of wits.

The premise of "Susan and God" and its argumentative development are sound. The impulsive attempts of a shallow young woman among her companions and friends to spread sweetness and light through the agency of a frank public confession of all their weaknesses of the flesh are rich in the probability of embarrassing and surprising outcomes. They occur with almost mechanical precision in the present piece and yet do not compound that complete integrity that somehow is expected. For the first time within this recollection the machinery of a Crothers comedy is wholly obvious.

Is Shrewdly Cast.

With the performance of the comedy by its able cost of 11 there can be slight justification for quibbling. Gertrude Lawrence, in the role of Susan Trexel, the trouble-maker who has a caught a new glimpse of God while abroad, executes her portrayal with a bubbling exuberance that gradually emerges into a keen and disquieting realization of the tremendous mess she has made of her own and other lives. It is a characterization of fleeting change of mood, vivacious vacuity and poignant chagrin, and stamps Miss Lawrence once again as one of the most accomplished and most versatile actresses on the contemporary stage—a position she already safely held by the remarkable scope of her impersonations in Noel Coward's cycle of nine one-act plays last season.

As a steadying balance for Miss Lawrence's butterfly philosophy, Osgood Perkins contributes one of his finely restrained performances as the husband who rids himself of the pernicious curse of drink by his own will power and with the substantial help of the girl who has always loved him discreetly from afar, but finally becomes a genuine threat to all he has sought to achieve in bringing his deluded wife to her senses. His acclaim by the audience was no less than the star's. As the daughter, Nancy Kelly offers an ingenuous and effective impersonation of a school girl at first grips with realities of life with which she finds it difficult to cope.

Of the others in the roles or importance it seemed to me last evening that Eleanor Audley, as the helpful menace; Vera Allen, as one whose romance was wrecked, and Edith Atwater did most to lend the play briskness and authenticity. The balance of power rests entirely with the feminine members of the cast, although Paul McGrath, David Byrne and Fred Leslie do their minor share competently.

"Susan and God" is handsomely mounted by Jo Mielziner, although not to well lighted, and last night elicited uncounted curtain calls from a large and distinguished first-night audience. If not destined to be another of Producer Golden's "smash" hits, it at least affords a diverting evening in the theater for those who revel in Miss Crothers' crisp dialogue.

'Swing Revue.'

With the Bob Crosby Orchestra, which will appear on the Capitol stage next Friday, there will be a miniature "swing-time revue," in which the Crosby musicmakers, Ray Bauduc, Eddie Miller and Bob Haggart will unite their respective talents.

Goldwyn Believes Color Photography Here to Stay; Budgets $2,000,000 for Big Musical to Prove It!

Stars Enlisted From Grand Opera to Radio for Role in 'The Goldwyn Follies' in Technicolor; Gigli's Screen Debut; Gloria Dickson on Way Up; Valentino Helps the Press Agents; Notes of the Theater.

BELL.

WITH what it is hoped has been reasonable consistence, this department, from the time of their introduction to the cinema, has been a noisy advocate of both sound and color photography on the screen as indispensable aids to the perfect realism that is the ultimate goal of the motion picture as an authentic medium of dramatic expression. From the outset it has been this column's contention that any step in the direction of a minutely accurate reproduction of actual life is a valuable addition to the Hollywood technique of picture-making in its highest form.

In the early days of its introduction to the silver sheet, sound and dialogue recording was only a feeble suggestion of the perfection that might eventually be reached. That perfection now rapidly is being approached, as those who view and listen to "The Firefly" will attest, when that new musical work is released for public consumption. The same is true of color photography. From weak beginnings as a defectively contrived attempt to apprehend the various tints of Nature, natural color films now are taking on something of the convincing qualities of actuality. At least, many of the major producers are so convinced of the practicability of color that the end of the era of the conventional black-and-white celluloids is beginning to heave distantly into view.

With characteristic enthusiasm and willingness to risk a huge sum of money on the soundness of his judgment, Samuel Goldwyn has swung all of his considerable resources to the side of prismatic production. He is signalizing his conversion to pigmented entertainment by the allotment of a $2,000,000 budget to the picturization of a Garganthuan gelatin bearing the title of "The Goldwyn Follies." Since Mr. Goldwyn does nothing by halves and usually knows what he is about, it is safe to assume that this newest of his enterprises will not come to be known as "The Goldwyn Folly." There already is tangible evidence to this effect.

For an operatic sequence in his "Follies," the great twister of English has engaged Helen Jepson and Charles Kullmann, dramatic soprano and tenor, respectively, of the Metropolitan Opera. An operatic chorus and 40-piece symphony orchestra appear in support of these celebrated singers. Drawing from every field of entertainment, the astute former glove salesman has not stopped with the diamond horseshoe.

For the dance's graceful artistry, he has recruited Vera Zorina and George Balanchine's American ballet; from radio, Edgar Bergen and Charley McCarthy, his termite-eaten dummy, and Phil Baker, and from the stage, Bobby Clark, the energetic comedian last seen on a local stage with Fanny Brice last season in another "Follies" bearing the original name of Ziegfeld but fostered by the Shuberts. The high-powered half of the former team of Clark and McCullough will augment a screen cast headed by Adolphe Menjou, the Ritz Brothers and other "name" players.

I cite "The Goldwyn Follies" as the prime example of Technicolor's speedy rise in favor among the "big shots" only because its $2,000,000 budget represents one of the biggest appropriations ever made in the history of the motion picture for the production of a musical revue. Paramount is coming along with its "Ebb Tide," also all in Technicolor's perfected three-color process, and numerous other majors are making it additionally evident that the gray screen is definitely on the way out.

However, there is no present intention of embracing this elegant opportunity to prattle an obnoxious "I told you so." Something might happen, even yet.

Speaking of music, as someone seems to have been a part of the time at least, it might be just as well to attend the initial Gigli film vehicle, at the Little this week, with the eyes closed. There is not a great deal to divert a mature dramatic taste in "Forever Yours," not even the figure of the great tenor. Beniamino Gigli is a squat little fellow who makes up in lateral dimensions whatever he may lack in altitude. All of the women in the cast are taller than he is. But that voice! When Gigli sings, everything else will be forgotten. In range, resonance and power, the Gigli vocal organ shares with his compatriot Giovanni Martinelli's the distinction of being the greatest since Caruso. If one wished to be less dignified about it than the occasion seems to demand, perhaps "high, wide and handsome" would be the words.

When "They Won't Forget" is shown on the screen at the Metropolitan Theater, following the current engagement of "Lost Horizon," Washington picture-goers will have an opportunity to appraise the histronic ability of an up-and-coming young actress by the name of Gloria Dickson.

High school plays, stock company appearances and work with a WPA Federal Theater project in Los Angeles gave the 20-year-old Idaho girl the experience that brought her a Warner Brothers screen test. Producer Mervyn LeRoy, one of the youngest, but most discerning, of the West Coast operatives, searching for a "new face" for the leading feminine role in "They Won't Forget," signed her to a seven-year contract. Instead of being the end, that was only the beginning for Miss Dickson.

As a result of her performance in LeRoy's bitter indictment of sectional prejudice, crooked politics and bitter hatred, Miss Dickson has been signed by Barney Klawans, Broadway producer, for his new stage play, "Wise Tomorrow," scheduled to open next month. She is now in the East rehearsing the new part—or so I am reliably informed.

The Pierce Hall Players, one of the Capital's oldest little theater groups, are ready to launch their 1937-38 season with the fast-moving, punch-packed comedy hit, "Boy Meets Girl," on October 20 and 21, which fall on a Wednesday and Thursday, unless I am looking at a last year's calendar. While open try-outs for places in the cast of this piece were held last week, all later productions will be recruited strictly from the membership of the organization. "Boy Meets Girl" is being directed by Howard F. Wentworth, who has been responsible for many of this acting group's most substantial successes.

The press agents of a sudden have gone in for the occult, clairvoyance, messages from the spirit world, and the like, in a way which, if not big, still is big enough.

They would have you believe that Rudolph Valentino, dead a decade, has inspired more fan mail during recent weeks than many a living actor. It all has been due, so they say, to an announcement by Agnes Ayres, his one-time leading woman—remember "The Sheik?"—that she has received a message purporting to come from the shade of the departed "greatest lover" of the screen.

This has precipitated a shower of some 300 posthumous Valentino fan letters—just a sucker for a P. A., that's what we are—some to the Paramount studios, where he was under contract, and some to Miss Ayres. Nearly all of them are from women asking details. One enclosed a message to be relayed back "the next time communication is established."

Miss Ayres disavows any belief in spiritualism, but declares that a medium recently gave her a message that could not have come from anyone else but its purported sender from the Great Beyond. She avers, further, that frequently mediums have told her that both Valentino and the late Wallace Reid were standing beside her at seances. Maybe so.

But now comes the main idea. Miss Ayres is beginning a screen comeback in "Souls at Sea," with Gary Cooper and George Raft, opening on the Earle screen Friday.

My favorite medium has just told me that that is very nice timing!

Honest-Confession Note.

Chuck-a-Boom Is Eleanor's Idea

Although it was announced but yesterday that she had originated a new dance for "Rosalie," caller the "Chuck-a-Boom," Eleanor Powell has already received dozens of wires from dancing teachers asking for instructions on how to do the number.

Wool Turban Is Gold Decorated

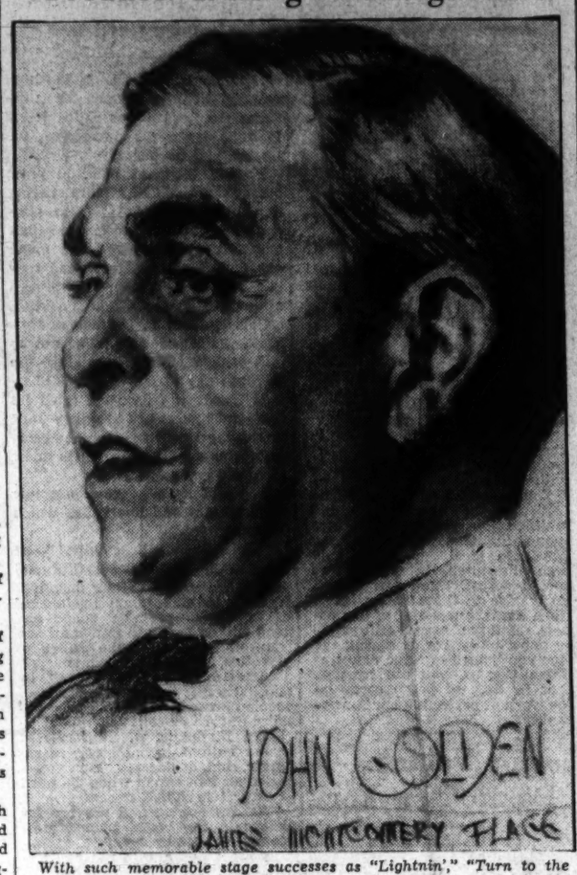
Producer of Long-Run Stage Hits



With such memorable stage successes as "Lightnin'," "Turn to the Right," "Let Us Be Gay," "The First Year," "Three Wise Fools," "Seventh Heaven" and many more still flying his banner in the public mind, John Golden this week brings Rachel Crothers' latest play, "Susan and God," to the National Theater for a week's engagement prior to Broadway. The Golden likeness appearing above was sketched from life by the famous artist, James Montgomery Flagg.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 20.—I wonder how many of you share my feeling of nausea when you read the theater ads. Superlatives—more superlatives—and still more superlatives! Every picture is proclaimed as the "Most dramatic," "Most thrilling," "Most sensational," "Most colossal" epic ever produced. Used so often, to describe anything and everything that comes out of Hollywood, the words lose their meaning. You are not impressed by the announcement of the real super-productions, because you have heard the most banal quickies that ever disgraced the screen described in the same fulsome terms.

WARNER BAXTER.

I hate to be oversold—and I hate cheap selling methods. And since I believe my own reactions are shared by the great majority of theater-goers, I think it is high time for Hollywood to try using a little truth, a little moderation and a little good taste in its ballyhoo campaigns. Hollywood should ponder the success of a theater owner in a little Kansas town who for years has frankly reviewed his offerings the week before their showing. "Next week's picture," he tells his patrons, "is a simple, unpretentious little domestic drama. You won't be thrilled and you won't hail it as a great picture. I believe, though, that you will be entertained." And he packs his house with satisfied patrons who have learned to rely on his advertising. It might also be a good idea for Hollywood to re-read the old fable of the boy who cried "Wolf!" too often.

Records recently made, public show that Warner Baxter, Gary Cooper and George Raft were Hollywood's best-paid male stars in 1936. Warner took in $284,384; Gary padded the Cooper bankroll with $265,454; George nicked Paramount for a neat $202,666. Which leaves me in a state of bewilderment, for the Messrs Baxter, Cooper and Raft, while fine actors, are certainly not the screen's most popular idols. No one of these three has anything like the fan following of either Clark Gable or Robert Taylor. Warner and George are not even tops in their own studios. No wonder the leading box-office stars, after reading about such earnings, feel underpaid at $100-000 a year.

Director Tay Garnett, sailing into Avalon Bay the other evening, felt his yacht scrape against something in the water, heard two girlish voices scream for help, and promptly leaped into the briny to effect a rescue. Imagine his irritation when the water-soaked lassies admitted that they had deliberately wrecked their skiff in order to attract his attention. They thought he might be able to get them into pictures. Honestly, your imagination would be staggered by some of the fool stunts tried by nuts who want to catch a director's eye.

* * * *

The prize ruse of all was used by a dizzy dame who scaled the M-G-M fence one night and then clambered to the roof of one of the big sound stages. When the M-G-M-ers came to work the next morning they found the lady—clad only in her birthday suit—posing for their edification. And she refused to descend; they had to send for the fire department.

Had lunch with Cesar Romero today and found him out of sorts because of a current fan magazine story. Having read it and considered it a very flattering, if somewhat mushy, article, I asked him to detail his objections—and discovered things about Mr. Romero. It seems he is irked because it stresses the fact that he got his first picture break through his dancing ability. "Damn it," he growled. "It makes me sound like a gigolo. All my stories do. Why doesn't someone tell them how I dug ditches, and drove a truck, and worked as a bank messenger? Why doesn't someone tell about me doing a man's job?" So I'm passing the information along—and I hope he feels better for it.

New York, Sept. 20.

A. S. W. ROSENBACH: Gracie Allen told George Burns last week: "I saw three genuine early-American rocking chairs at only $750 each. I'm buying them. Doesn't that prove I know art?" . . . "No," Burns returned, "It only proves that you don't know how much three times 750 is!"

MUSICIANS' UNION: Fritz Kreisler will be sued by a theatrical agent for commissions due on his sale of musical arrangements to a film company. Kreisler told the agent after the sale: "Commission? They told me that if I brought the arrangement to you, you'd sell it for me. Well, thanks for that!"

* * * *

* * * *

D. D. WILMAN: You still haven't permitted Mitzi Green, who opened at the Versailles, to sing "The Lady Is a Tramp," the song she sings in your show, "Babes in Arms." Lew Brown, the song writer, volunteered to help her. And so, on opening night, Mitzi sang Brown's new song, entitled "Why I'm Not Permitted to Sing 'The Lady Is a Tramp!'"

ROSELAND DANCE HALL: Your proprietor, Lou Brecker, is the backer of the new International Casino, which will rival the French Casino. And, so, in retaliation, Shapiro & Blumenthal, owners of the French Casino, have bought Iceland Palace, to convert it into the world's largest ballroom. The property transfer will be announced in December.

SCHOOL DEPT.: Jean Muir, while working in summer stock at Algonquit, spoke to the elevator boy at her hotel, who confided to her that he was studying law. "I want to specialize in corporation law," he stated . . . "But there's no future in that," Miss Muir advised. "The big-name lawyers seem to have a monopoly on this type of practice" . . . "True," the youngster replied, "but you don't understand. You see—I don't mean being a lawyer for corporations. I mean to fight them!"

POLITICS: Before Hugo L. Black was appointed to the Supreme Court bench, he once sat with John L. Lewis, who suggested a change in the writing of judicial decisions. "Decisions should be written so that the layman will understand them," Lewis declared. "The way they're written now, even lawyers can't grasp them" . . . "If I ever get on the bench," Senator Black vowed, "I'll write decisions everybody can understand" . . . Supreme Court Justice Brandeis, who once had made the same vow, heard of this—and was skeptical. "Once they put that black judicial robe around us," he commented, "we all change . . ."

BANKING DEPT.: When Franklin D. Roosevelt was Governor of New York State, he summoned Morris L. Ernst, the liberal attorney, to his executive mansion and offered him a post with the State banking board. Ernst agreed to accept . . . "In that case," Roosevelt said, "I have one favor to ask of you" . . . "So soon?" the noted liberal replied. "I accepted the job only one minute ago, and already you're asking a favor. What is it?" . . . "Just this," Roosevelt returned. "Promise me that for the first year, at least, you won't bring the Tom Mooney case up before the banking board."

Film Toughie Ill Smoking a 'Cig'

It probably couldn't have happened anywhere else in the world—but in Hollywood on "The Last Gangster" set one of the toughest gangsters in the picture got sick from smoking a cigarette.

It was the first ciarette Donald Barry had ever smoked in his life. The script called for him to blow the smoke in "gangland's chief," Edward G. Robinson's face.

After three takes Barry was forced to retire from further action. The "tough guy" leaned against a pole outside the set, his face as green as any small boy's.

Poll's Plumage For Badminton

Green Wool Is Leopard-Trimmed

Three-piece suits are popular with Hollywood's younger players. Betty Grable, "glamour girl de luxe," in "Thrill of a Lifetime," has her first fall outfit ready for the first cool day. Bright green ribbed jersey, with a swagger cape of baby leopard, is matched by a skull-cap of the jersey, leopard gauntlet gloves and a zippered bag of the leopard lined in jersey.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Should She Beg His Wife's Forgiveness, Asks Widow Who Had Affair With Physician.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been in love with my physician for two years, and, as a matter of fact, still am. However, I've stopped seeing him. He has been married for eight years and I am a widow, 25. I would give anything in the world (except my reputation, which already has been dealth a blow) to marry him and be the mother of his children. But due to the fact that we are both in the limelight, so to speak, it can't be done. Divorce is out of the question. We've decided there is no answer but to give each other up. It hurts, mentally and physically. I've lost 14 pounds in the last two weeks.

• • • •

His wife knows about the affair, and although she has spoken of it to no one (of that I'm sure) she hasn't failed to hurl slurs in my direction and blacken my character in general, whenever opportunity has presented itself. She is extremely jealous of her husband, and nags and dominates him. Perhaps her jealousy is heightened by the fact that she can never have children and has to rely on her own resources to hold him . . .

• • • •

The nucleus of my problem is this: I know I've done her a terrible wrong and I'd like to ease my conscience by going to her and asking her forgiveness, and reaffirming the promise I've already made to myself never to see her husband again. It would be no easy task, but I feel so soiled inside that I can hardly stand it. Do you think she would accept my apology? I'd feel like a fool if she didn't.

• • • •

No one could have a poorer opinion than I do of women who get themselves mixed up with married men; I shudder to think what my friends would say if they dreamed of my entanglement (for I am active in church work and a member of several clubs), but it's terribly easy to slip, especially when the man is your physician and a very understanding and sympathetic one at that. I didn't think this could happen to me. Neither of us did. But it's just one of those things that do happen, whether you think they can or not.

• • • •

I am so ashamed of myself I don't know what to do, and some sound advice from you may put me on the right track. How shall I ask his wife's forgiveness, and how much of our affair should I confess to her?

REPENTANT.

The Less Said the Better.

DEAR REPENTANT: This is a case of "least said, soonest mended." In my opinion, it would be a colossal blunder ever to admit to anyone your erstwhile affair with your physician; and inexcusably bad taste, besides, to attempt to discuss it with his wife. If a "terrible wrong" has been done her, I should say it has been less of your doing than her husband's doing; and that he, acting in full knowledge of the fact that divorce would never be, has wronged you equally.

• • • •

As an emotionally awakened, love-denied widow, you are in a pathetically vulnerable position, while he, as a married man and a physician, possessed of a legitimate love partner as well as presumabley scientific understanding of the physiological and psychological needs of the human being, could very easily have averted this affair had he chosen to do so. I should say he took completely selfish advantage of the situation and that now, either for reasons of social or professional expediency, or because his desire for you is waning, has now suavely shown you the door.

• • • •

There is absolutely no sense in spending your energies in an orgy of hysterical remorse and self-loathing. Consider the gentle charity of the Great Teacher, Who said of Mary Magdalene that much is forgiven her because she hath loved much; and realize that genuine contrition for a past misstep, indorsed by a sincere resolve to avoid in future any occasion which might make for a repetition of the same mistake, is the kind of penitence which obtains remission of sin. In my opinion, you have already made peace with your own conscience; and if spiritual justice requires any further expiation I think it is being rendered in that mental and physical anguish you are undergoing as a result of forswearing your illicit love.

M. H.

Smart for Afternoon and Informal Evening

By Ethel Ehlen,
The Post Fashion Editor.

SILK METALS cast a scintillating note in the colorful and luxurious silk parade of fall fashions being held throughout the Nation this week. Rich and opulent-looking silks are being featured in new and glamorous silhouettes. Dresses for daytime wear, of silk satin, novelty and plain silk crepe, silk duvetyn and silk jersey, mold the figure in flattering lines from neckline to hem. Waistlines are corseted or with a decided lowered tendency; necklines are generally high; bodices are draped, shirred or sculptured in design; sleeves vary from above-the-elbow to the popular bracelet length.

Dresses for formal afternoon have achieved a new importance in this luxury trend. You may sparkle and dazzle in a black silk crepe or silk satin costume literally sprinkled with paillettes, beads or sequins. Silk metal dresses of street length add a touch of glamour to the cocktail hour, the matinee or the bridge game. Hats of silk metal match your cocktail or dinner gowns. The new metal cloths, by the way, are said to be tarnish-proof.

For dinner wear, this season's silks feature silk satin or silk crepe, with an occasional silk faille or heavy silk sheer. Skirts of the hobble version, or full, with an uneven or lifted hemline, are outstanding. Sleeves are usually long and tight and dripping with fur and paillettes. Dinner suits are popular and are an ideal selection for the woman who doesn't care about period influences and the like.

Live Better By Budgeting

SHOW US a family that accumulates things—that gets the kind of car, the furniture and the home it wants—and we'll show you a family that budgets its income against leaks.

Perhaps you think your own income's too small to budget for big purchases — that you'd better wait until Don's next raise. No income's too small. When you budget you learn that money stretches.

Jot down your expenses last month. What did you spend for rent and food? Rent should be about 25 per cent of your income, food about 20 per cent for a family of four. That leaves a good margin, 55 per cent, for clothes, household-operating bills, insurance—and your "accumulating" fund.

Does rent seem hard to trim? Moving to a spot where there's less carfare to pay is equivalent to a cut in rent. Or, when it's a question of saving for a home of your own, isn't it worth while to live for a year or so in a cheaper spot with fewer conveniences?

If your food bill's out of line, figure how much is due to entertaining. To invite a dozen people to coffee, dessert and bridge costs less than a company dinner for two guests—and is more fun.

Then guard that 55 per cent against little leaks. Perhaps you went to seven movies last month but wanted to see only four of them. Why not some jolly games for those bored, loose-end evenings?

Send 15c for our booklet, "How to Budget Your Income," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

Eskimo Headgear Inspires New Hat

Paris (U.P.).—The "calotte universelle"—a two-in-one hat —is the hit of autumn and winter styles, which have their inspiration in the Far North where Eskimo headgear and peasant styles of Greenland nave contributed to novel designs in felt, fur and velvet.

A cap of felt, draped velvet or fur fits well down on the back of the head, while a second, more elaborate hat is perched forward on top. The over-hat may be worn alone—or the cap (which is suitable to wear with any other hat for a touch of color contrast) may be worn separately for afternoon or evening occasions. The snug caps are designed to be effective with any type hairdress, and fur ones completely cover the hair at the back.

A second version of the two-in-one hat is seen in "double-duty" designs, which are simple when worn at one angle, but extremely dressy when reversed.

Fashion Editor To Interview French Stylist

LUCIEN LELONG, famed Parisian coutourier and recently elected president of the Chambre Syndicale de la Couture . . . society composed of all the great fashion artists in France . . . will be interviewed over Station WRC this afternoon at 4 o'clock by ETHEL EHLEN, Fashion Editor of The Washington Post.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, September 20.

OF ALL the interesting and amusing—in the best sense of the word—citizens of our silly town, I choose the gentlemen farmers, who prefer to raise a hill of beans 500 feet above the gassmelly streets of the greater city—and, believe me, dozens do!

ALICE HUGHES.

To be slightly vulgar, let me point to Mr. Louis Samler. He lives at 25 Central Park West, a mountainous and costly apartment pueblo, where have dwelt such world-famed folk as Miss Claudette Colbert and Mr. Rudy Vallee. Mr. Samler hails from a fine farming country around Lancaster Pa., way, and thought it would be nice to do a little gardening right here in town. Which he does, outside his fourteenth-floor penthouse, in a little plot 10 by 18. There Mr. Samler raises all of 15 kinds of vegetables—just a few of each, of course. Even so, he has had three crops of roastin' ears, and so much spinach that he had to unload some on the neighbors.

Just across Central Park, on Fifth avenue, is our real pioneer sky farm—17 floors up, at 1016, and the possession of Mrs. Regina Jais. In addition to all kinds of vegetables, Mrs. Jais had 3,000 roses this summer, and other flowers in vast and colorful profusion.

Of course, we rural New Yorkers can't claim that our roof farms are complete. No cows, for instance. Citizens here seem to have some sort of strange, mad prejudice against keeping cows on roofs! There isn't any other livestock, either. But the silent, friendly corn has done well this year!

• • • •

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Mrs. Bessie Lasky, wife of Jesse, the pioneer film magnate, is enjoying a "one-woman show" at our snooty art gallery, Knoedler's. Mrs. Lasky paints flowers, chiefly, and works in the patio of her house near Hollywood. Born in Boston, the artist studied for the life of a concert pianist, and did not switch to the brush and palette until after her three children were grown . . . Our most interesting hotel guest of recent weeks put up at our Hotel Piccadilly. An editor of a country newspaper in Wyoming, he had with him a flock of homing pigeons, and every night turned a bird loose carrying a message for his paper! Can't beat that for editorial verve!

• • • •

The other afternoon one of our busy patrol wagons was a-bumping along down Park avenue with two women, alas, as passengers. Then the driver looked back and saw he had only one customer. "What became of the other lady?" he asked. "Oh, she got out a couple of blocks back!" replied the remaining fare. It seems that the lock on the door had become sprung and one of the girls quietly stepped to freedom when the pie wagon stopped for a light. And she hasn't been seen since!

• • • •

The Princess Paley was a very beauteous bride when she married Jack Wilson, Noel Coward's business manager, the other day. Natalie has always been a trifle too thin, but she seems to have put on a litle weight for her second marriage.

• • • •

Though she is no longer married to Lucien Lelong, he still makes her clothes . . . The most striking wallpaper I've seen this year is made of sliced oyster shell, with a lovely pearly cast that makes a room look really submarine. Slightly flashy, perhaps, but really beautiful, even if we aren't mermaids!

• • • •

I'm noticing an Irish style influence these days. For instance, I saw a gold kid handbag the other day with a big gold harp nearly covering one side. And the newest high-standing bonnets are called "Blarney hats." And why not some Shamrock prints? There probably is such a thing already, if we just knew where to look.

New Book, 'Maidcraft,' Solves Problems of Domestic Service

Authors Suggest Methods of Selection, Duties to Be Expected, Daily Routine and Type of Costumes.

By Genevieve Reynolds.

ARE YOU one of the many housewives who became panicky over training a new maid? Or do you give up all pleasures because you are afraid to leave the children with an improperly trained one? If so, "Maidcraft," a new book by Lita Price and Harriet Bonnet will help you solve the vexing minute household problems and show you a short cut to domestic tranquility.

The authors say: "The system you adopt in your household will depend on many things: your purse, the size of your home and family, your temperment, likes and dislikes."

The quality of your maid's service will depend first upon her native capabilities. In selecting a new maid, Mrs. Price and Mrs. Bonnet point out these foremost qualities for which to look: "Intelligence, dependability, honesty, cleanliness, good health, a good disposition, adaptability, nice appearance and pleasant manners."

"If you want your maid to be satisfactory, you should have a clear understanding about the amount of wages and the approximate hours of work, who pays for unavoidable breakage, how meals are served daily and the approximate hours, whether or not she is to do all or part of the laundry, whether or not she is to live on the premises, whether she may entertain company on the premises and if so how many guests at a time, what entrance she and her friends are to use, whether there are any restrictions on her use of the telephone and whether or not she will be required to look after children."

Routine Suggested.

For keeping the house the writers of the book suggest the following daily schedule: "Straighten the living room, sweep the porch and walks or fix school lunches, wash breakfast dishes and put dining room and kitchen in order, plan daily meals and make market list, make beds, put bedroom in order, clean bathrooms, prepare luncheon and clean up afterwards. Also, make early preparation for dinner, straighten the maids room, take care of children or serve tea, prepare and serve dinner and clean up afterwards."

Mrs. Bonnet and Mrs. Price list the odd jobs that may be done in the maid's spare time as follows: "wipe spots off the kitchen stove, wipe spots off the refrigerator, wax or shellac linoleum, check emergency shelf to see what is needed, sharpen knives and scissors, fill salt shakers and pepper shakers, study magazines and book for ideas on meal planning, marketing, food combinations, new recipes—clean kitchen cabinets, polish silver, brass or other metals (individual pieces of trimmings on furniture, wood work, plumbing, stove etc), adjust and make minor repairs on furniture or woodwork such as tightening of screws, adjustments of legs or removal of stains. Also mend tears or rips, inspect electrical equipment for safety and efficiency and adjust same, oil equipment such as electric mixers, vacuum cleaners, fans, referators etc. Clean piano keys, dust light globes, brush through radiators, brush Venetian blinds, wipe off window shades, tighten hardware, oil hinges, dust screen, clean furniture, woodwork, walls, wall paper, upholstery, rugs, wax floors, dust and clean heating stoves, dust books, eradicate pests, ventilate attics and basements seldom used, dispose of old papers, clean combs and brushes, press fine linen apparel and other needs that might arise from time to time."

Recognizing that appearance is important, the authors give explicit directions for the maids' costumes. They suggest approximately four short-sleeved uniforms for morning wear. These may be colored, checked or striped. Colored uniforms are most flattering and do not show dirt easily.

Authors Well Qualified.

"White uniforms are most appropriate when attending children. Large white aprons may be worn in the house to save laundry. Two uniforms for serving dinner are necessary. The black silk or broad cloth uniforms are worn with a sheer white apron and cap set. However, the gray or maroon uniform is considered quite as smart. The material may be of silk, poplin or broadcloth."

Furthermore, Mrs. Price and Mrs. Bonnet say: If you buy uniforms remember to get fast colors, plenty of width across the shoulders to avoid unnecessary splitting, length about ten inches from the floor, more or less, depending on the current fashion."

In writing "Maidcraft" the authors combined professional education with sound experience as housewives and mothers. For the last two years, Mr. Bonnet, who received her Bachelor of Science from the University of Texas, has been teaching maid training in the Technical High School at San Antonio. Mrs. Price, after graduating from Washington University in St. Louis, took courses in Journalism at The University of Wisconsin, Harvard and Columbia Universities.

Today's HEALTH TALK

Antiretentional Diets.

Antiretentional diets are designed to eliminate retained liquids in the body.

There are many conditions in which water retention in the body apparently plays a role. Indeed, in simple overweight itself the loss of weight which should immediately follow a restricted diet is likely not to make itself evident for a week or more on account of water retention. Then if the diet is kept up a balance appears, the body loses water rapidly, and the expected weight loss occurs in a day or two. This is especially seen in the added weight that accumulates about the time of the change in life of women. Just before a monthly period also women are likely to store water and gain a few pounds; during the menopause this is exaggerated, and the increased weight is at least partly water retention.

In certain other conditions, such as migraine (sick headache) and some of the convulsive states, water retention has been suggested as a cause of the attacks.

In general the carbohydrate foods—sugars and starches—favor water retention. So do fats, especially if eaten in combination with the starches and sugars. The proteins, on the other hand, tend to free water and are antiretentional. Salt is likely to aid water retention and is therefore restricted to some extent. And naturally liquids are restricted.

An antiretentional diet is built along these principles:

Carbohydrates—About 1 to 2 grams per pound of body weight—roughly 5 to 10 ounces a day for a person of average weight.

Liquids—Are restricted to about a quart or a quart and a half a day. This includes coffee, tea and other beverages as well as water.

This works out as follows in rough household measures:

Proteins—An egg contains about one-third ounce of protein. Veal, lamb, white meat of chicken, steak has about an ounce of protein in a portion 4 inches by 3 inches by one-half inch thick. Beef, lamb, tongue, ham and mutton a litle less on account of the fat. Two ounces of liver contains about one-fifth ounce of protein.

Carbohydrates — Most vegetables have a little less than an ounce of carbohydrate to the pound. Beans, peas, lima beans, artichokes, squash, pumpkin, onions, turnips and fruits have about twice that much.

Washasble Neckties.

Washable neckties are being taken up in a big way by masculine arbiters of fashion. Made of Congo cloth and other noncrushable fabrics, they keep on looking sprightly no matter how often they are tied and untied. As soon as they lose their crisp freshness, a soap and water bath is all they need to re-enter the service of the most exacting Beau Brummell.

Shirtmaker Style Popular.

The shirtmaker style frock is smart for fall. In fact, it is so smart that Joan Crawford, movie star, has ordered three of them, all fashioned from stiff velvet. One is black, one burgundy, and the other fog blue.

Jeweled studs march down the front in place of buttons, and matching jeweled cuff links are thrust through the cuffs of the long sleeves.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

By Ida Jean Kain.

WHICH is the most important part of your slimming program, diet or exercise? That depends on your figure. If you have a humpty-dumpty silhouette, you probably need both diet and exercise. But if your figure needs a little encouragement here and a lot of discipline some place, corrective exercise is the most important part of your slimming.

We used to go on a diet and hope for the best, with the result that the weight came off just any place. Now we know better. First of all, you must analyze your faults. The thing to remember in this slimming business is that you cannot clip off specific inches by a low-calorie diet. Nor can you lose any great amount of weight simply by exercise. In general, with more than 10 per cent overweight, you must curtail calories; and with spotty overweight you must exercise.

Study Your Type.

What's your type? Are you stocky, with weight above normal and measurements in proportion? Or, are you somewhere near normal weight but with measurements awry? You may actually be underweight and have a measurement problem that calls for serious exercise. Again, it may be that you are one of the large-frame girls who shouldn't try for streamlines. Every figure problem is different and demands a special technique.

The general overweights are apt to fall in the stocky class. You seem to be the ones who gain most easily and therefore diet is of first importance. Due to your extremely low fuel requirements it takes less food to keep you going. Send for the "Calorie Chart" post haste! You must learn to choose the low-calorie foods that will help you to be well-fed without gaining weight.

If you're overweight in spots, you need spot exercise.

Exercise takes a minor role in your program, for too much exercise will encourage your appetite. You should concentrate on the stretching exercises that will slim your waist and streamline your figure. You will look your best with weight slightly above normal.

Those of you who are overweight mainly in spots should go about slimming in just the opposite way. Exercise comes first, and diet is second. Your problem is to replace flabby fat with well-toned muscles that will hold your figure to compact lines. The leaflet, "Spot Exercises for Symmetry," makes a good starting point for you. You need to eat intelligently but not necessarily, to go on a diet.

You underweights must diet to gain and take rational exercise to prevent gaining in spots. Your food selection is very important. Choose easily-digested, nourishing foods, rather than rich, fattening dishes. Rational exercise balanced with rest stimulates the appetite, builds healthy muscle tissue for steady nerves, and enables you to relax. Send for the "Weight-Gaining Material" and for the "General Exercises."

Strenuous ExerciseShould Be Avoided by Underweight Persons.

The girl with larger-than-average frame makes her best appearance with weight about 10 per cent above the accepted averages. If you exceed this allowance, keep your reducing calories between 1,400 and 1,600 per day. You will probably need exercises for supplying the waist, reducing the upper arm, and improving the contour of the bust.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

While a slip of a boy blew out candles on a cake yesterday in Lausanne, Switzerland, 300-odd representatives of Washington's official residental and diplomatic society were calling at the Siamese Legation to celebrate his birthday. For the youth, who is now away from his homeland to be educated, is His Majesty King Ananda Mahidol of Siam, holder of such proud titles as "Supreme Arbiter of the Fbb and Folw of the Tides" and "Brother of the Moon"—and he was 12 years old yesterday.

It was in his honor that the Siamese Minister and Mme. Rajamaitri, who recently returned from a summer's vacation on Cape Cod, had planned a party their guests won't soon forget. It was in his honor also that their tiny daughter, 3-year-old "Didi" Rajamaitri, helped receive in the main salon, where priceless prints, carvings and rich brocade blended with huge bowls and vases filled with scarlet and gold dahlias, roses and delphinium.

HOPE R. MILLER.

Scores of diplomats, a sizeable number of officials and a host of residential social lights filed up the curving red-carpeted stairs and enjoyed the lavish hospitality of the smiling Siamese Minister and his attractive wife for more than two hours. Slim and straight in her floor-length hostess gown of jade crepe with a scarf of apricot velvet that contrasted with her lacquer-like hair, the hostess was as pretty a picture as I have seen in many a day.

Honors for the day, however, were undoubtedly divided between the boy whose birthday was being celebrated and the junior hostess, who had the time of her life at the reception given for him. In a bouffant blue frock that matched the narrow blue ribbon around her hair, "Didi" Rajamaitri got all the attention generally bestowed on the belle of the party. She greeted the guests, she showed them the rubber duck that she had brought along as company, and she seemed to be sorry when the nurse took her away to rest.

Meanwhile, in the main salon, in the dining room—where there was a buffet for tea, coffee, salad, sliced ham, chicken, ices, sandwiches and cakes—and in the reception room, where champagne and punch and highballs were being served continuously, guests collected in small groups to chat, to greet each other after summer vacation trips, to talk about who won't be back in town this season, and who will, and what is on schedule for fall and winter.

Among the early arrivals were Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, wife of the Attorney General, who recently returned from a vacation in Manchester, Vt., and who had chosen for her ensemble yesterday a tailored brown frock, trimmed at the neck in turquoise beads and a wine-colored turban with a turquoise and wine-roll across the crown; the Minister-Counselor of the French Embassy, Jules Henry; Mrs. Emil Hurja in a trim beige suit with beige fur trimming and black accents and a turban to match; the Minister of Austria and Mme. Prochnik, the latter in a dark suit with a veiled turban; Capt. don Umberto Cugia Marquis of Sant' Orsola, and Col. Vincenzo and Signora Livia Coppola of the ILtalian Embassy; Mrs. Campbell Prichett in a navy blue frock with light blue embroidered flowers scattered on the skirt and a navy turban with a pale blue flower on the front.

Every Embassy and Legation Represented

Every Legation and Embassy was represented in the gathering that assumed enormous proportions during the last hour. Glimpsed here and there among the crowd were the Minister of Finland and Mme. Jarnefelt, she in a smart black ensemble with a silver fox scarf; Miss Yoeh E. Wang, daughter of the Chinese Ambassador, in a typical Chinese frock of beige silk piped in brown; the Counselor of the Mexican Embassy, Luis Quintanilla and Senora de Quintanilla, who recently returned from Mexico City; the Minister-Counselor of the Cuban Embassy, Dr. Jose T. Baron; the Counselor of the Japanese Embassy, Yakichiro Suma and Mme. Suma, the latter in native dress—a gray silk kimono with a wide blue brocaded sash.

Among others seen there were Mrs. Sol Bloom in a black frock and hat, and her daughter, Miss Vera Bloom, in brown; Mrs. Thomas Burke, Mrs. Louis Caldwell in a gray ensemble set off with an orchid corsage; the Minister of the Dominican Republic and Senora de Pastoriza; George T. Summerlin, former American Minister to Panama and now Chief of Protocol, State Department; Judge and Mrs. Samuel Wassell, Mrs. Louis Schapiro, one of the guests who knew King Ananda Mahidol, long before he ascended to the throne, and who lived in Bangkok for a number of years when her husband was health advisor to the Siamese government. With Mrs. Schapiro was her son, Mark Schapiro, who mentioned that Dr. Victor Heiser, the noted physician whose autobiography was a best seller last year, was in town yesterday and had been their guest for luncheon. Dr. Heiser, incidentally, is another who was a personal friend of King Mahidol's late father, Prince Mahidol, who studied medicine at Harvard University under the name of "Mr. Songkala."

Chances are, the bright-eyed lad who, in his own words, "likes to play with trains rather than be king," would have enjoyed yesterday's party more than most, for there were a number of guests who had known his father and mother in far-away Bangkok. Among them there was frequent mention of the boy whose birthday was being celebrated with a reception in Washington and with the ringing of bells and gayest of festivities in the Siamese capital. Bit by bit, they could tell the story of the boy king who was placed on the throne in 1935 after his uncle Prahadhipok forsook sovereignty for the bucolic quiet of a manor in Surrey, England—the boy who has been so busy at school in Switzerland that as yet, he hasn't gotten around to taking up his scepter.

Many Notables at Play Opening

A "first night" with a distinguished accent was in evidence at the National last evening when a number of officials and social notables were on hand to enjoy Gertrude Lawrence and Osgood Perkins in a play that seems to be a sure-fire hit.

Among those who helped to make the audience one of the most outstanding at a play opening since Gertrude Lawrence was here last year were Admiral and Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, in a black net dress and fur cape; Senator and Mrs. James Davis—she in a flowered print and a black velvet coat—and Miss Jane Davis; the Attorney General and Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, who came with Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Kremer and Mrs. George Holmes; Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja, the latter in a black net frock and fur wrap; Mr. and Mrs. Oliver La Gorce, Mrs. Campbell Prichett, and the Counselor of the Hungarian Legation, Anthony de Balasy.

Also there were Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Hogan, Mr. and Mrs. Bertram Chesterman, Mr. and Mrs. Page Hufty, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph C. McCarryaghy, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Abner Drury, the latter in a black sequin gown and ermine cape; Mrs. Barge Hatz in a trim black frock, trimmed in fringe; Mrs. Morris Simon, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Lansburgh, David P. Gaillard, Mr. and Mrs. Landra B. Platt and Representative Theodore Peyser, and many more.

Harris & Ewing.

Tiny Didi Rajamaitri stood in the receiving line yesterday when the Siamese Minister and Mme. Rajamaitri entertained in celebration of the birthday of King Amanda Mahidol of Siam. The Minister and Mme. Rajamaitri are in the background, and Mrs. Thomas Burke is the guest being greeted by the young hostess.

About the Town

With Dudley Harmon

THOSE nasty little insects, the termites, are no respecters of diplomatic property. Having done such a job last year on the Finnish Legation that the Minister and Mme. Jarnefelt were obliged to move into another mansion on Tracy place, they are now busy gnawing their way through the Czechoslovakian Legation on Massachusetts avenue. When he discovered the presence of damaging pests the Minister immediately put in a call to the Department of Agriculture, with the result that a corps of workmen is busy installing copper plating to ward them off. At that, the process will take three or four months, so when Mme. Hurban returns the first of next month from her summer home at Rehoboth, she and the Minister will no doubt have to look around for other temporary living quarters.

DUDLEY HARMON.

Meanwhile, the Austrian Minister and Mme. rochnik are hoping that the termites won't creep ister and Mme. Prochnik are hop-

FRIENDS of Mr. and Mrs. Jouett Shouse weclomed them back from Europe—or rather Mr. and Mrs. Shouse welcomed a few friends—at a small, but very high, tea on Sunday afternoon. It was held at the hosts' country place, Wolf Trap Farm, near Vienna, Va., and most of the guests drove up just as the sun was setting in a cloudless sky.

They were met on the lawn by Mrs. Shouse's daughter, Joan Dodd, who looks just like her mother, and has as faultless manners as any young lady in Washington. Inside, they found fires burning and a buffet supper of cold ham and chicken, deviled eggs, lettuce and tomato salad, wine and beer, and for the teatotalers, hot chocolate.

ON THEIR European trip, Mr. and Mrs. Shouse took the cure at Marienbad, an after-cure in the Tyrol, and visited the Paris Exposition, in which they were a little disappointed. They were joined in the French capital by Mr. Shouse's daughters, Elizabeth and Marian, and by the two friends with whom they have been touring Europe, "Punk" Bradley and Anne Perin, of Washington. The Shouse girls and "Punk" plan to visit Russia before sailing October 8 from Hamburg for this country.

The hosts on Sunday compared notes on Marienbad with Dr. Josef Nemecek, Counselor of the Czechoslovakian Legation. Others present at the tea were the Austrian Minister and Mme. Prochnik; Mr. and Mrs. John Caswell, Judge and Mrs. John M. Sternhagen, Mr. and Mrs. William MacCracken, Mrs. Charles Darlington, recently returned from a Nantucket summer; and Mrs. Higginson Rogers.

IF A SEVERE depression ever hits the Reverdy Wadsworths (she was formerly Eleanor Roosevelt), they can no doubt get along very well by opening a gift shoppe. A Washingtonian who attended their wedding September 4 in Skaneateles, N. Y., reports that their presents were incredibly numerous and perfectly beautiful. One of the gifts, presented by Senator and Mrs. Peter Goelet Gerry, was a solid gold coffee service with crystal cups engraved with a crest.

D. C. Sigma Kappa Alumnae Chapter Totals 300; First Meeting of Season to Be Held September 29

The number of Sigma Kappa alumnae in the Nation's Capital is fast approaching the 300 mark, according to Mrs. J. Earl Bassett, former tennis champion of the District and newly elected president of the sorority's alumnae chapter. While the group is composed primarily of former members of Zeta Chapter, which was installed at George Washington University 51 years ago, it includes many from all sections of the country.

"The Washington Chapter is always glad when out-of-town members affiliate with us," Mrs. Bassett said, "for we like to feel that the group here is truly representative of our 45 colleges and 60 alumnae chapters located at various points throughout the United States and Canada."

The first meeting of the season is scheduled for September 29, when the program of activities for the year will be announced. The most important event of the fall season will be the annual Roll Call meeting in November. This takes the form of a banquet, attended by both alumnae and members of the George Washington Chapter, and serves the dual purpose of a "homecoming" for Zeta Chapter members and a Founders' Day celebration.

One Founder Still Living

Of the five women students who founded the society at Colby College, Waterville, Me., in 1874, one is still living, Miss Louise Helen Coburn, of Skowhegan, Me., whose sister, the late Mrs. George Otis Smith, former grand president of the sorority, was a resident of Washington for many years. Miss Coburn is a trustee of Colby College. She is well known as a poet.

Besides Mrs. Bassett, the officers of the Washington alumnae chapter are Mrs. George C. Rodgers, vice president; Mrs. Donald H. Saunders, secretary; Mrs. Virginia Mitchell Smithson, treasurer; Mrs. Bernard F. Burdick, registrar; Mrs. Charles E. Krey, panhellenic delegate, and Miss Lee Hardell, panhellenic alternate.

Representing the national organization are Miss Ruth L. Smith, regional president, and Mrs. Charles E. Krey, district counselor, who have jurisdiction over chapters at Randolph-Macon Woman's College, Duke University, Florida State College for Women, and the University of South Carolina, in addition to Zeta Chapter at George Washington University.

The national organization is headed by a former Washingtonian who now resides in Philadelphia, Mrs. Alice Hersey Wick, daughter of the late Gen. Mark L. Hersey. Mrs. Wick, however, still considers Washington as her home and makes frequent visits to the local chapters.

The national philanthorpy of the sorority consists of social service to less fortunate inhabitants of the rock-bound coast of Maine. For many years the sorority's boat "The Sunbeam" has carried food, supplies, and spiritual cheer to these coast and island people. The late Henry Van Dyke, who took a personal interest in the work being done by Sigma Kappa there, wrote a poem as a tribute to the sorority. A full-time social worker is employed. This project is carried on as a permanent memorial to the pioneer women who braved the disapproval of public opinion nearly 70 years ago in order to obtain a higher education, and who founded Sigma Kappa while pursuing undergraduate work at Colby College.

Winner of Award For Scholarship

Last spring the George Washington Chapter of Sigma Kappa won the silver cup which is offered each year by the Panhellenic Association composed of the 13 sororities at the university, to the chapter whose members have the highest record in scholarship. In addition to this honor of group performance, the chapter is proud of an individual member, Miss Margaret Graves, who won the award offered annually by the Phi Beta Phi Fraternity to the woman graduate who has done the most constructive work in student activities. Miss Graves was president of the Woman's Athletic Association and was a member of Sphinx and Hour Glass Honor societies.

Among the prominent women in the local membership are Dr. Ella M. A. Enlows, Miss Mary Agnes Brown an attorney in the Veterans Administration, who has recently returned from the Hague where she attended the International Congress on Comparative Law; Miss Dorothy Croissant, noted designer; Miss Martha McAdams, pianist; Winifred M. Jacobson, direstor of the Wilmington School of Music; Miss Irene Pistorio, principal scientific illustrator for the Geological Survey; Mrs. Archibald Kent painter; Mrs. William C. Van Vleck, president of the Faculty Women's Club of George Washington University; Miss Matilda Eiker, author; Dr. Eunice Crabtree, instructor in the Maryland State Normal School; Mrs. Homer T. Bone, and Mrs. James Shera Montgomery, organist.

Women Voters Release Book On Public Work

Mrs. George Howard Hoxie, of Kansas City, Mo., wife of a physician interested in preventive medicine and herself a student of public health problems, is the author of a pamphlet released yesterday by the National League of Women Voters, on what laymen need to know about public health organization.

Mrs. Hoxie traces the history of the public health movement during the 90 years of its active existence. She explains Federal grants to the States under the maternal and child health and public health sections of the Social Security act, and the opportunity they provide for constructive health work on an unprecedented scale if the funds are wisely administered for essential services by trained workers. She points out the danger of the annual waste of millions of dollars if State programs are poorly planned or poorly administered.

The statements from the League of Women Voters describing this pamphlet calls attention to the "vigorous and heated controversy over the slowly developing idea that government has a further duty, that of enduring to the lower income groups, as well as the indigent, prompt adequate medical service in illness. The solution of the problem of sickness costs is not yet clear, but may be sound sickness insurance plans adapted to this country's special needs.

"The practice of putting a political appointee—often a physician with no public health training or experience—at the head of the department to hold office during the term of the Governor appointing him, expecting trained officials to work under him at lesser salaries, has failed and should no longer be tolerated," the statement declares.

Miss Rappaport Addresses Juniors

Young people of today must realize their responsibility to fight for peace or they will be obliged to pay the cost of war, Miss Laura Rappaport told the Junior section of the Washington Council of Jewish Women at its opening tea in the Community Center yesterday afternoon. About 400 members and guests attended the program and reception at which Mrs. Michael Shapiro, president of the juniors, presided, and Mrs. Mark Lansburg, council president brought greetings from the senior organization.

Miss Rappaport, director of program research and section service for the national council, urged the juniors to inform themselves on the issues of the day, preparatory to taking an active part in community and national affairs as seniors. Their work now should prepare them, she said, to assume responsibility in movements for peace; social welfare legislation such as that governing child labor, housing and wages, which the national council supports, and in contemporary Jewish affairs.

"Peace today is more important to you than to any other age group, Miss Rappaport told her audience. "If our Nation should have war, you would have the most to lose."

The program, which was opened with a prayer by Miss Irene Hirsch, included in addition to Miss Rappaport's address, a sketch, tracing the progress of the juniors' activities, written by Miss Goldie Bachman and read by Miss Hannah Stolar. It was illustrated with slides showing pictures of members and officers as their names were mentioned. Mrs. Abraham Alloy, Miss Anne Bachman and Miss Bess Kramer assisted with the presentation. The music comprised a group of solos by Sue Taranto, concert pianist, who is a member of the junior group.

The hospitality was in charge of Mrs. Saul Hearn, assisted by Miss Sara Grossmann, Miss Kramer and Miss Miriam Hirsh.

Each chapter in the District will be asked to plan at least one program to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the formation of the Constitution.

Junior American citizens' clubs and D. A. R. junior membership groups will play an important part in the year's program. The first junior group will be organized by Constitution Chapter early in October.

CENTRAL'S ACE PASS TOSSER

Gonzaga Is Favorite Over Central Today

Season's First Gridiron Clash Carded for Latter's Stadium This Afternoon; Mitchell's Lads Set to Avenge Former Defeats.

By Jack Munhall.

One of the choicest bits on the 1937 interscholastic football menu will be offered this afternoon when Orrell Mitchell leads Gonzaga in an invasion of Central Stadium in the season's opener.

Gonzaga will enter the game a slight favorite to revenge the beatings handed them by the Mount Pleasant eleven during its leaner years.

Determined to restore the I street institution to the lofty position it enjoyed in the days of Johnny Bozek et al., Mitchell whisked his charges to a camp near Colonial Beach late in August and for over a week prepared them for the campaign before his rivals had turned their thoughts to football.

As a result the Gonzaga eleven which invades Central today is far advanced at this stage of the season, and for this reason, and because it boasts the heaviest line in many years, will be favored to defeat Central for the first time in five years.

Aerial Battle Likely.

In preseason scrimmages both teams have shown an inclination to fill the air with passes at the slightest provocation and today's battle may well be decided via the sky lanes. However, in this department both are well equipped. Central has in Lou Chacos, its quarterback, one of the best passers in the high school ranks and with Sam Fox, a towering end on the receiving end, it is dangerous at all times.

Even more fortunate is Gonzaga, for it can point to a pair of excellent flippers, so close in ability that Coach Mitchell himself cannot choose the better man. The two are Jim Shaw and Jim Ellis, who pitch with great accuracy to Charley Butler, a fleet wingman, and to Louis Fillippo, a backfield playmate.

Hardy Pearce, Central's mentor, has been singing the blues of late because of a deplorable lack of reserve strength. Satisfied with the performance of his first eleven in a recent game played under match conditions with St. John's, he nevertheless discovered that once his regular line was removed the attack noticeably bogged.

Will Watch Second Team.

Today he will cast a critical eye on the second team, which he plans to use as frequently as the score allows. For after all, he points out, this game and the two succeeding ones are no more than tune-up affairs for the all-important inter-high series which opens in early October.

Gonzaga, although it will present its heaviest line in some time, will as usual be outweighed but hopes to offset this deficiency with a tricky, fast attack built around Shaw and Ellis, two of the classiest halfbacks in the scholastic ranks. In the line, Frank Fenwick, 200-pound All-Prep tackle, and Joe McDonald, a similar choice at center last year, lead a smart forward wall.

Central is also blessed with a set of good backs. Back from last season are Bill Ickes, considered the best blocker in the interhigh series and who has shown well this year; Bob Goldsworthy, sophomore ball-carrying sensation in 1636, and Chacos. Supplementing this trio is Wilbur Barr, who clinched a regular fullback position by his driving smashes through the line plus an unexpected ability to forward pass.

So in the final analysis it would seem that the teams are very well matched. Central appears to have a slight edge when the regular line is holding forth while Gonzaga has a better attack and better reserves.

Howard Entry Is Victor In Young Bird Contest

"Stomper," representing George Howard's loft, won the third of a series of "young bird" races sponsored by the Aero Racing Pigeon Club, figures compiled last night show. The victor negotiated the 160-mile course from Connellsville, Pa., at an average speed of 1,402.73 yards per minute.

Krahling, 1,394.23; Ed Barrett, 1,393.33; Morris Bros., 1,388.90; Crown and Cox, 1,387.86; Van Sciver, 1,386.86; Fierstein, 1,386.26; Dougherty, 1,385.63; Morgan, 1,366.87; Hartley, 1,357.43; J. C. Card Gridmen Unimpressive

Head Coach "Dutch" Bergman yesterday selected the Catholic University eleven that will inaugurate the 1937 campaign against Canisius Sunday at Buffalo, and then admitted that he was giving it the toughest assignment any Cardinal team has handled since he took command at Brookland seven years ago.

"And it's almost a hopeless one," he continued. "We'll be all right after we get a couple of games under our belt, get our assignments down pat, perfect our timing and all that, but I don't see how we can ever be ready in time for Canisius."

The Cardinal line-up selected includes Calabrese and Kasunich or Shine, ends; Katalinas and Cairo, tackles; Capt. Sochon and Sabo, guards; Ambrose, center; Munhall, quarterback; Carroll and Vidnovic, halves, and Pirro, fullback. This group represents the strongest, smoothest on the campus at this time.

Sunday Bergman sent his boys against the Washington Presidents in a two-hour scrimmage and discovered enough flaws to keep the coaching staff busy a month. Timing was off, blocking ineffective, and the tackling anything but good. It was a rather dismal showing for a team usually considered one of the best schooled in this neck of the woods. But the errors detected can't be corrected this week without scrimmaging, and Bergman, because of a paucity of material, is downright afraid to scrimmage.

Canisius, one of the best smaller clubs in the East last season, has its entire first team back intact, and reports from Buffalo indicate that the Jesuit school intends to take the Cards in stride.

GEVINSON WINS, GALLAGHER LOSES

Mrs. Stern Cards 89 to Get 2d Spot

Favorite Fives 87 Over Columbia C. C. Links; 93's Qualify.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Mrs. Betty Palmer Meckley, playing her fourth gross prize of the season yesterday at Columbia, rallying with a 41 on the back nine after an outgoing 46 for an 87, which promptly installed her as favorite in the fifth annual tournament.

Mrs. Charlotte Stern, an Indian Spring clubmate of the medalist, was second low gross with an 89, the only other 90 breaker in the record starting field. Net scores of 93 and under made the championship flight as the field of 32 starts play today for the title vacated by Miss Gloria Rodgers.

Mrs. Ralph Goldsmith, Woodmont, and Mrs. J. F. Dowdall, Congressional, deadlocked at 91, while Mrs. L. G. Pray and Marion Brown were tied a pair of strokes higher at 93.

Four prominent linkswomen played, but withdrew for various reasons, including Helen Dettweiler and Ellen Kincaid, who leave for the Women's National tomorrow and would be unable to play through; Mrs. Roland MacKenzie, the lone former champion in the starting field, and Mrs. K. S. Giles, who scored one of the lowest nines of the day, a 44.

Plays Short Holes.

Deadly accuracy on the short holes aided Mrs. Meckley in scoring her second consecutive medal victory on the Columbia course in the last two weeks, the other being the Corby Cup medal.

The former Maryland State, District and Middle Atlantic champion hit the fourth green from the tee but the ball bounded over and she chipped back and three-putted. Par three's were recorded on the eighth, thirteenth and sixteenth.

Mrs. Meckley started three-putting on the first hole where she took six. A bad approach cost her two strokes on the sixth hole and she played the finishing holes in 5-3-5 to be out in 46. Another three-putter hurt on the twelfth hole but the remainder of the distance was played in even women's par.

Mrs. Walter Stokes, whose score soared to 96 with several bad holes, plays the favorite in the first round today and will receive a four stroke handicap. Mrs. Stokes, the Star Cup and Keefer Cup victor, should extend Mrs. Meckley to the limit, even without the handicap, and marks it as the best match of the day.

Mrs. Scott In.

Mrs. Jack Scott, Kenwood, former Colorado State champion and Maryland State finalist, made her 1937 links debut and was safely in the qualifying circle with 97—4—93. She meets Mrs. Mary Dowdall, of Congressional, today, and must spot 2 strokes.

Other leading pairings find Mrs. Stern meeting Mrs. C. E. Purdy and giving 4 strokes, Mrs. L. G. Pray playing Mrs. G. F. Hussey and Marion Brown vs. Mrs. Myron Davy. Two of last year's semifinalists, Mrs. Leo Walper and Mrs. A. W. Tucker, meet Mrs. R. L. Rose and Mrs. R. A. Lacey, respectively.

This Morning

So Mr. Babe Ruth Snubs Lewis, Eh?

By Shirley Povich.

Babe Ruth hauled off the other day and picked his 1937 All-Star big league team, which is his privilege, but apparently the Babe has been spending a great deal of his time on the golf course this season and very little in major league ball parks

We refer to his selection of the Yankees' Red Rolfe as the third baseman of the All-Star outfit, thus giving the heave-ho to Washington's John Kelly (Buddy) Lewis, who also operates as a third baseman in the same league. Now, Rolfe is a thoroughly likeable young fellow, kind to his mother and not a bad third baseman, but he is not to be mentioned in the same inhalation with Buddy Lewis if the talk runs to third sackers.

POVICH.

There is nothing that Rolfe accomplished around that third bag that Lewis cannot do equally well, and if you want the truth as this department sees it, John Kelly is the superior defensive man. And when it comes to offensive value there can be no argument—Lewis is outhitting Rolfe by exactly 31 points with his very respectable .310 average.

* * * *

They can't dismiss Lewis, either, on the grounds that he is or may be a flash in the pan. The kid from Gastonia who this year was facing that famed "second year" test, has come through handsomely. He batted .299 last season (there never was any anxiety over his fielding), but this season was supposed to give an accurate line on his durability. Well, all that Lewis did was to lead all the third basemen in hitting.

* * * *

With Lewis' success in mind, Manager Bucky Harris is not disposed to view too critically the debut of another rookie Washington infielder—young Jimmy Bloodworth, the second baseman from Chattanooga, who in his first week's trial with the Nats has made exactly one hit and that one an affair that got away from the White Sox third baseman last Sunday.

* * * *

If Lewis' debut with the Nats at the end of the 1935 season is a precedent, then Bloodworth, too, is destined to make good with the Nats. Because Lewis, in his first trial with Washington failed dismally, like Bloodworth. In ten games with the Nats at the end of '35, Lewis made exactly one hit and gave no evidence that he would blossom into a .300 performer.

* * * *

Thus Harris is not judging Bloodworth's failure to hit too harshly. He is making full allowances for the fact that the rookie recently completed a gruelling season with Chattanooga in the Southern Association, where the hot sun takes a terrific toll and saps the strength of the ball players. Bloodworth, like Lewis, came up from Chattanooga

Hoyas Lose Ace; Illness Hits Squad

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Chill winds of adversity swept over the Hilltop yesterday, leaving in their wake more worries and problems for the leaderless Georgetown coaching staff to grapple with.

Home from training camp only two days, the squad, or what there was of it, worked out briefly under the direction of George Murtagh and "Mush" Dubofsky, while Head Coach Jack Hagerty took to his bed. Hagerty, who was stricken with a mild attack of grip at Old Point Comfort, is under the care of his physician and probably will not rejoin the squad before Thursday.

Skeleton Squad.

One of the team's most promising sophomore backs, Alex Cava, has been lost through the world's oldest ailment, "heart trouble." Al simply couldn't forget the girl he left behind and decided to throw up college and football and return to her. His absence leaves a large void in Hagerty's plans, for the boy was a topnotch ball carrier and passer.

Adding to the Blue and Gray's troubles are Tony Barabas' ailing ankles, which have developed a sudden weakness and threaten to impair his efficiency this season. A tall, rangy fellow with plenty of speed, Tony is a valuable man and figures importantly in the Hagerty scheme of things. He probably will be on the shelf a few days while the underpinning is being overhauled.

Selects Team.

At least a half dozen other players, including Hardy and Riofski, the leading centers, have colds or other minor ailments which are retarding their progress. But practice will not be curtailed. On the other hand, it will hit its hottest pace this week, at the conclusion of which a starting line-up for the inaugural with Shenandoah will be selected. Only three men, Hardy, center; Valliquette, halfback, and Stralka, tackle, have any assurance of winning first-string positions at this writing, and even they may not be in there by Saturday after undergoing the third degree.

Playoff for West's Title To Guldahl

By the United Press.

Cleveland, Sept. 20.—Ralph Guldahl, 25-year-old Chicago professional, tonight wore the national open and Western open crowns—first golfer since 1904 to win both titles in the same year.

Guldahl easily defeated Horton Smith, the "Joplin Ghost," in an 18-hole playoff at Canterbury Club to defend the Western open title he won last year at Davenport, Iowa. It was his fourth Western open championship.

Guldahl and Smith finished the 72-hole medal test yesterday tied at 288—even par.

Tied for third were Slammin' Sam Snead, of White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., and Paul Runyan, of White Plains, N. Y. Both carded 289.

Guldahl's par golf was accomplished in the face of a high wind that swept over the course throughout the tourney. Smith's usually perfect swing was out of line and his tee shots more than once found him behind trees or in the rough. His putting was far from accurate.

After both parred the first hole, Smith three-putted the second and went one down. A wild five-iron shot on number three put him two down.

At the end of eight holes Smith looked hopelessly beaten—six strokes behind. Then he returned to winning form. He birdied the ninth, tenth, and eleventh and was only two down at the end of 12 holes.

Guldahl birdied No. 13 to increase his lead to 3 strokes in the medal play.

On No. 14 Guldahl blasted a 310-yard drive while Smith shot into the rough, behind a tree. In an attempt to hit in, Smith struck the tree and glanced off into the next fairway. Guldahl played a perfect second shot, rolling to a stop 2 feet from the pin. He sank his putt for a birdie to gain a 5-stroke lead when Smith needed a 5 for the hole.

Y., Sept. 20.—Pete Kopcsak, Army's second-string fullback, will be lost to the team for the greater part of the season, if not all of it, the Cadets learned today as they returned to regular practice after last Saturday's informal scrimmage with New York University. Eddie Hogan Earns Unanimous Verdict

Beats Pride of Foggy Bottom Decisively; D. C. Southpaw Floors Kid Covelli Twice for Count of Nine; Dean Finds Tartar.

By Shirley Povich.

Washington batted .500 at Griffith Stadium last night. Lou Gevinson did the pitching and Marty Gallagher caught.

But Gevinson southpawed the Capital to an even break in the two main bouts after tying up with battle-scarred Kid Covelli, the little Latin from Manhattan, in a fast-moving pitching duel.

With both little men blood-smeared after the fifth round, Gevinson took charge of the hostilities and sent the ageing Covelli banging against the canvas for two clean knockodowns.

Gevinson Floors Covelli.

Gevinson wiped out whatever lead Covelli might have had in the fifth round when he came out of a furious exchange on the ropes and smashed his favorite weapon, a lightning left full on Covelli's chin. The Little Italian toppled backward to the center of the ring and lay and lay prone as Referee Denny Hughes started his count.

At four, the inanimate Covelli suddenly fixed his muscles and looked blankly into Highes' face. At eight, he nodded that he would get up and at nine he got up. He drew down the cheers of the overcoated crowd of 3,500 when, back on his feet, he carried the fighting to Gevinson.

Holds Gevinson at Bay.

The little Italian who always fought back furiously when he was stung, kept Gevinson at bay for the remainder of the ninth round and in the tenth carried the fight to Lou in a wild-swinging foray, winning the round, but very properly losing the decision.

The Post's score card showed six rounds scored for Gevinson and four for Covelli.

It was a strange Marty Gallagher who heard the opening bell against the big Hogan. Abandoning his customary caution, Gallagher waded into the Waterbury heavyweight as if bent on immediate destruction, but was brought up sharply by a fearful right hand smash to the head.

Relying almost solely on his ponderous left hook until the last two rounds, when he gallantly tried for a knockout, Gallagher's right was in storage for most of the evening as he fought a one-hand fight.

Hogan, who had poured a ceaseless fire into Gallagher to produce the fastest heavyweight battle in the history of District pugilism, remained upright during these last two rounds and was the winner on points by a wide margin. The decision in his favor was unanimous. The Post score card showed six rounds for Hogan, three for Gallagher, and one even.

Round four produced Gallagher's chief bid to win the fight. In that session he banged a terrific left to the side of Hogan's head and knocked Hogan half way across the ring, but the nearest approach to a knockdown was Hogan's slip to the floor for no count in the ninth.

Marty's forcing tactics found Hogan willing at all times and it was in the exchange that the Waterbury heavy piled up the points, banging his right to the side of Marty's head, while the Foggy Bottom boy was trying vainly to get inside and fight at close quarters.

Hopelessly beaten unless he could score a knockout, Gallagher charged Hogan in the ninth, caught him with two stiff lefts to the chin, but was slowed by a right Hogan planted on his mouth. In the tenth, a now-desperate Gallagher finally threw his right and Hogan, after taking two to the chin, was glad to hang on, but the final bell found him punching back again.

Daniels Wins Bout.

Arm-weary after the first round but still punching, Maynard Daniels, former District amateur heavyweight champion, celebrated his professional debut with a unanimous four-round decision over Baltimore's Tom Vitre. Tottering groggily in the second round, Daniels staged a surprising finish and dropped the wild-swinging Vitre for a nine count in the final round.

Another former amateur, 127-pound Mike Morton, enhanced his stock as a professional by dealing out a four-round beating to the veteran Doug Swetnam. The decision was unanimous after Morton took all of Swetnam's fire and fought back viciously, scoring repeatedly with a jarring left hook.

One Sailor Born, an importation from Atlanta, Ga., gave Busy Johnny Dean a busy time of it in an eight-round preliminary and by the grace of some myopic judging was rewarded with a draw. Born's punches carried authority—when they landed—but Dean belabored him from the outset. The sailor reacquired his sea legs in the seventh when Dean all but had him on the floor. He made a furious finish of it, though, to win the last round from Dean.

Mastodonic Murray Kanner, the 192-pound steamfitter, took a night off from his trade to bloody the nose of Kirkwood Burke and win a three-round technical knockout in the main preliminary. Kanner, with a huge edge in both height and reach, transformed the bout into a ridiculous contest, drawing blood with his first punch.

Parkinson Resigns From Boxing Board

Kenneth Parkinson, energetic member of the District Boxing Commission, who has been a prime mover in boxing reforms here, last night announced his retirement from the commission.

His resignation, effective today, already has been accepted by Maj. Ernest Brown, chairman of the commission.

Parkinson stated that the pressure of his law business was the chief reason for his retirement, but also pointed out that he had moved his permanent residence to near-by Maryland.

His successor, who will be appointed by the District Commissioners in pursuance of the District Boxing law, is expected to be named within a week. Because the policy of the commissioners always has been to keep one practicing attorney on the boxing board, a Washington lawyer will doubtless be named.

Marty and Eddie All Tangled Up

Gomez Wins 20th Game as Yanks Beat Tigers; Cubs, Giants Victors

Lefty Yields But 4 Hits, Fans 9 Men

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 20.—Lefty Gomez became big league baseball's first 20-game pitching winner of the year with a classy four-hit whitewashing job against the Tigers.

His fine flinging, coupled with timely hitting by Lou Gehrig, Joe DiMaggio, who belted his forty-fourth homer of the year, and Bill Dickey gave the Yankees a 5-to-0 victory over Detroit in the finale of their season's series.

It was Lefty's fourth straight win and second straight shutout. The big league strikeout king, he fanned nine during the game to boost his season total to 184. In his last 30 innings, during which he has won four straight, he has allowed only 18 hits and fanned 30 batters, and, with today's game, ran his shutout streak to 24 consecutive scoreless innings.

He did not walk a batter today, as only four Tigers reached base, and only two got as far as second.

Giants Win Over Cardinals, 10-3

St. Louis, Sept. 20.—By the simple means of getting away to a flying start and then giving Carl Hubbell the job of staying in command, the New York Giants walloped the Cardinals, 10 to 3, with a 17-hit attack today to retain their two and one-half game National League lead.

The victory, featured by a first-inning outburst in which each club connected for six straight hits, driving both starting pitchers to the showers, gave Hubbell the honor of becoming the first pitcher in the National League to win 20 games this year.

Taking over at the start of the third, after Cliff Melton had been belted out in 1-3 inning and Walt Brown had been relieved in 1 1-3, Hubbell allowed four hits and fanned six in a classy seven-inning relief performance. He missed by some three hours the distinction of becoming the first 20-game flinger in the majors for the year, since Lefty Gomez turned the trick for the Yankees in New York during the afternoon.

Chicago Shades Dodgers by 5-4

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—The Chicago Cubs stopped a Brooklyn Dodger rally just in time today and came through with a 5-to-4 decision to stay on the heels of the New York Giants in the National League pennant race.

After being held to two hits for eight innings by Bill Lee, the Dodgers exploded in the ninth and fell just short of tying the score after belting Lee and Clay Bryant out with a four-run rally. Bob Logan, rushed in to relieve Bryant, got Rosen for the final out on a grounder.

The Cubs scored twice in the fourth inning on a walk, Bill Jurges' triple and Lee's single, and added their other three runs in the sixth on two hits, an error and a walk. One of the hits was a two-run double by Gabby Hartnett.

Browns Divide With Red Sox; Win 1st, 8-6; Lose Nightcap, 7-5

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Sept. 20.—The Red Sox wound up their season's series today with the St. Louis Browns by splitting a double-header before a scant 1,500 customers after losing the opener, 8 to 6. The Sox came back to take the nightcap, 7 to 5, for their fifteenth victory of the year over St. Louis against seven defeats.

Both of St. Louis' relief pitchers performed more capably than the starters. Juli Bonetti pitching hitless ball for the last five and one-third innings of the opener, and Lou Koupal setting the Sox down in order in the last two of the nightcap. Bill Trotter started the first game, Jim Walkup the second.

Two Red Sox rookies enabled Boston to emerge with a split. Jose Gonzales, former University of Southern California athlete, started his first major league game in the nightcap, and although he yielded 14 hits, he went the route.

"Time Out" gives you the humorous side of sports—Shirley Povich's column, "This Morning," gives you the serious side, on the sports page.

Dobson Picks Terps' Squad

Head Coach Frank Dobson unsheathed his pruning knife yesterday and carved the University of Maryland varsity football squad into three sections to facilitate drilling of the men for Saturday's opening game with St. John's, of Annapolis.

Form held true in virtually every berth, especially with regard to "A" squad, which embraces a majority of last season's holdovers.

Budkoff, Smith and McCarthy, ends; John DeArmey and Brown, tackles; Wolfe and Surgent, guards; Walton, center; Weidinger, quarter; Meade, Hewitt and Wheeler, halfbacks, and Frank DeArmey, fullback, comprise the first group.

On "B" squad are Bryant and Beamer, ends; Albarano and Daneker, tackles; Lawrence and Lloyd, guards; Forrester, center; Miller, quarterback; Skotnicki and Mondorff, halfbacks, and Boyda, fullback. Group "C" includes Woof and Vollmer, ends; Booze, Finlaysen, Dowling and Davis, tackles; Hess, Rudy and Aitcheson, guards; Parvis, center; Brand, quarterback; Cronin and Egan, halves; Jones and Morris, fullbacks.

Offensive duties have been divided among seven men, with "Jumbo Jim" Meade, naturally, expected to bear the brunt of the burden. For kicking and passing Dobson will rely on Meade, Hewitt, Scotnicki and Mondorff. McCarthy will help out with the punting and Weidinger, a top-notch pitcher, has been assigned to the passing squad. Mondorff, Bryant and Hess will specialize in kicking off.

with the stamp of being a hitter and at Orlando next spring will be given a fair shot at Buddy Myer's job.

• • • •

The other infield rookies the Nats placed on display recently—Shortstop Frankie Treshock and Second Baseman Jerry Lynn, from the Salisbury club—are at best long-shot hopes even to survive the training scene at Orlando next spring. It is a long hop from the Class D Eastern Shore League to the majors.

• • • •

Both Treshock and Lynn collected a pair of hits in their one game with the Nats last Sunday and Treshock displayed a powerful throwing arm, but there was nothing to enthuse about in his fielding otherwise. Their presence in the lineup was only a sop to the 1,200 visiting fans from Salisbury, Md., anyway.

• • • •

And young Mike Guerra, the Salisbury catcher, hardly figures in Harris' 1938 plans either. The little Cuban catcher made a downright horrible debut when, in the first inning, he forgot that a pitch was the fourth ball and needlessly threw to second base, heaving the ball into center field.

• • • •

Big Arnold Anderson, the phenom from Sioux Falls, S. Dak., who was uncovered by Nick Altrock on a midsummer scouting tour, is being tabbed for future reference despite his dismal debut last Sunday when in the first inning he walked three batters, hit one, made a wild pitch and finally retired in the fourth inning, under duress.

• • • •

Allowances are being made for Anderson, and justifiably. When he found himself pitching last Sunday in the first big league game he ever saw, big Anderson was gazing also into the glove of a catcher who was also performing in a big league game for the first time. Between Anderson and Guerra, the knowledge of the Washington battery concerning the hitters' strength and weaknesses was exactly zero and that didn't help.

• • • •

Some time this week, Bucky Harris will unveil the most sensational of all the Nats' young sensations—Joe Kohlman, who pitched Salisbury to 26 straight victories. Kohlman is Clark Griffith's pet and speaking of those two no-hitters Kohlman pitched this season, Griffith was saying yesterday that "I wouldn't take a 3-to-1 bet that any pitcher in the big leagues could go down in that little league and pitch a no-hit game on any given date. Kohlman must have something."

Four World Records Set AtRichmond

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Sept. 20.—Four world records were engraved on the outboard scroll today when America's premier drivers completed the ninth national championships with sensational bursts of speed in 1-mile time trials.

A checkup after the deafening staccato had been silenced and breezes on the James River had swept away fumes of exploding gasoline charged with ether, castor oil and what-not, showed Edwin Pabst, Malwaukee, in possession of two world marks for midget motors and Clint Ferguson and Fred Jacoby, jr., holding world time trial honor for Class B amateur and Class B professional craft, respectively.

Young Pabst shattered the former world time trial mark by a wide margin when he coaxed a speed of 36.128 miles per hour from his tiny motor over the 1-mile course. Miss Nellie Cooper, Kansas City, was clocked in the previous best time of 34.4885 at Chicago last year. Pabst set a 33.076 competitive record against a crack field at the opening of the three-day race meet Saturday.

The Class B professional mark of 50.492 set by Dick Neal, Kansas City, took an awful beating today. Jacoby, North Bergen, N. J., entry, opened the assault by hiking the mark to 51.360. Thom Cooper, Kansas City, then sent his shell skimming over the brown water at 51.579.

Both drivers took a second shot at the twice-boosted figure, but were too slow. On the third and last trial allowed, Jacoby sent the mark soaring to 51.766. Cooper sped just under his best time on his final effort.

Ferguson, Tabor Academy student from Waban, Mass., extended the amateur record to 52.494. The previous mark of 51.988 was established by Ferguson at Red Bank, N. J., in 1936. This honor brought some consolation to the schoolboy who saw three titles slip from his grasp in this year's races.

Dale Prather Sold To Cleveland Rams

Dale Prather, former George Washington University tackle, who joined the Redskins this season, was sold yesterday to the Cleveland Rams, of the western division of the National Professional Football League, by the local pros, General Manager Jack Espey announced last night.

Prather, who had impressed with his spirit and fine defensive play during the Redskins' preseason training did not play in the opening game against the Giants last Friday night. Although coach Ray Flaherty could find little to choose between the Emporia, Kans., boy and four other tackles, he was released to help reach the player limit of 25. Prather's release cut the number to 26.

He will join the Rams today in Philadelphia, where they play the Eagles tonight, and is expected to be in the starting line-up.

Bombers Play Stars at Park

World Heavyweight Boxing Champion Joe Louis and 20 Brown Bomber softball players are scheduled to arrive here early tomorrow morning for their 8:30 o'clock game with Vic Baratte's District All Stars at Griffith Stadium tomorrow night.

Coming out of the Middle West with the distinction of having shattered all attendance records and with a long winning streak in the bargain, the Bombers will feature Louis at first base for at least four innings.

In an effort to provide real opposition for the Bombers, Manager Baratte has recruited an imposing list of players that features: Jack Caspar, Preacher Adkins, Sam Hook, Ken Berry, Temple Jerrell, Al Wellens, Oren Shanks, Joe Bovello, C. Gephart, Hal Steffes, Jerry Zanallotti, Charles Axqualino and Tom Clark.

Ladies' DayToday; Ferrell on Mound

Wes Ferrell, who first won pitching fame with the Cleveland Indians as a rookie who scored 20 victories in his initial season in the big leagues, goes to the mound for the Nats today—against the Indians. A special ladies day has been granted bl club officials.

Bucky Harris' parade of rookies will continue today with at least one ambitious rookie in the outfield and another in the infield. George Case, whose solid hitting, speed on the bases and clever fielding have won him a host of admirers, will return to the rightfield post, and Jimmy Bloodworth will share the second-base job, perhaps, with young Jerry Lynn.

Sanitary Bowlers Open 11th Season

"Well, we're off——"

Those words, a broad smile and the true right arm of Mack L. Langford, vice president of the company, officially opened the Sanitary-Piggly Wiggly Bowling League last night as 32 teams began play in the eleventh annual tournament at Convention Hall.

Substituting for E. B. Yonkers, president, Langford started things off when he rolled the first ball in the center alley to begin play in the world's largest industrial league.

Earl Upperman, captain of the Sanico Doughnut team, last year's champions, was presented with a huge cigar by Langford and added to the gayety of the occasion by accepting the doner's offer of a light, puffing deeply on the 12-inch smoke the remainder of the evening.

Mower Wins Mt. Pleasant Race Purse

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., Sept. 20.—Spotting his rivals from 5 to 17 pounds, Mower earned a purse for the Millsdale Stable today in the Mount Pleasant Purse, outstanding event on the Monday program here. The son of Sickle, carrying his 122-pound assignment as if it were a wad of cotton, flew along in front to defeat Capt. Cal by a length and a half. Third money in the field of seven went to Sir Emerson.

With Jockey C. Corbett in the saddle, Mower exhibited a form reversal, although he might have needed his race here on opening day to find his racing legs. However, he was beaten 7½ lengths on that occasion. Today it was a different story. Once in front, Mower forgot quitting tactics and finished with excellent courage under Corbett's drive.

Mower and Capt. Cal drew the bulk of the betting and it was not until the equivalent odds were delivered that it was determined that Mower was a $5.10 favorite.

Ideal racing weather again prevailed and 9,000 persons indulged in the alleged sport of kings.

Nymph Wins First.

William Elder's Nymph turned in her maiden victory in the first race, defeating Bold Stroke by a length and a half and bringing the favorite players a $4.50 mutuel. The race was between the first two from the start and Jungo picked up the crumbs of third money seven lengths behind Bold Stroke. Jockey C. Bierman gave the winner a rousing ride.

Enough money was dumped into the mutuel plant to make Sunny Fields' odds drop from 10-1 to 3-1 and the little filly then ran off with the honors in the second race to pay her backers a $7.20 mutuel. She led Time to Spare and Acute to the wire. In her three trips postward before today, Sunny Fields had failed to get into the money.

The Millsdale Stable's Roguish Girl romped home by five lengths to score her first victory of the year. Warrior Queen and Gin Daisy were the principal chasers in the field of nine. Charlie Corbett had Roguish Girl in front in the opening furlong and she never gave her backers an anxious moment, paying an $8.70 mutuel.

Busy K. Pays $8.90.

Carrying an $8.90 price tag, Busy K., ridden by Jockey K. McCombs, survived a gang finish to defeat seven others in the Bel Air Purse, secondary feature. The Busy American colt, owned by Mrs. P. De Lee Watts, had a neck the better of Recussion, with Careful Miss taking the third money. Busy K. was always a forward factor but was not asked for real speed until the stretch. He responded to go to the front but had to be hard handled to stave off Recussion, one which came "

A. I. B. School Of Banking Enrolls 250

Courses Offered Provide Training in Finance and Economics.

By Thomas M. Cahill.

With enrollments approximating 250 in number, this year's school term of Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking, opened last night. During the past two weeks enrollments have been received by representatives of the chapter in the various banks and at chapter headquarters in the Bond Building.

The American Institute of Banking is one of the largest specialized educational institutions in the world and here, as in the more than 250 chapters in the United States, courses offered have been planned to provide a progressive system of training in banking and kindred subjects. Practical instruction is coupled with a scientific study of banking, finance and economics.

Paul S. Seltzer, American Security & Trust Co., who is chairman of the chapter's educational committee, reports that courses have been revised to meet the requirements of bank employes and, at present, are sufficiently comprehensive to interest both junior and senior bankers.

Stella Akin to Speak.

Miss Stella Akin, special assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, will be the principal speaker at the annual dinner of the women's committee of Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking, which is to be held in the Chinese room, Mayflower Hotel, tomorrow evening, at 6 o'clock, according to Mrs. Myrtle P. Lewis, of the Liberty National Bank, who is chairman of the committee.

This dinner is conducted annually by the committee to interest women employes in local banks in the educational courses offered by Washington Chapter, and, at the same time, provides an occasion for women graduates and members of the institute to meet to discuss mutual business interests.

It is expected that between 150 and 200 women will attend this year's dinner, and besides Miss Akin, President Thomas J. Groom of the District of Columbia Bankers Association and officers and members of the board of governors of Washington Chapter will be guests of the committee. Dean Raymond B. Dickey, representing the faculty, will speak briefly on the advantages offered by the institute courses. William H. Laughlin, president of the chapter, will bring greetings, and Paul J. Seltzer, chairman of the educational committee, will outline courses offered for the year 1937-38.

An institute audience will not be entirely new to Miss Akin, and, in turn, undoubtedly many will be present at the dinner who will remember the outstanding address she delivered at the women's breakfast held in connection with the national convention of the American Institute of Banking in Washington in June, 1934.

Miss Akin, who is the first Southern woman to be appointed to her present position, which she has held since 1933, was also the first woman admitted to the bar in Savannah, Ga., in 1917, and in addressing the Georgia Bar Association in 1923 she likewise was the first woman to gain that distinction. For ten years she was active in child welfare work, serving as a member of the playground commission of Savannah. Her work in the Department of Justice consists of defending suits against the United States in the Court of Claims. She is a member of numerous clubs, the National Women Lawyers Association and is an honorary member of the Henderson, Ky., bar.

Washington Chapter of the National Association of Cost Accountants will open its 1937-38 season with a dinner meeting at the Hamilton Hotel tomorrow evening. The principal speaker will be Nelson A. Miller, who will talk on "Departmental Accounting in Drug Stores." Mr. Miller is the assistant chief, marketing research division of the Department of Commerce.

He has had extensive experience in both retail and wholesale distribution, first in the business field as executive secretary of William Taylor Son & Co., of Cleveland, and as assistant to the general manager of the Acme White Lead & Color Works, of Detroit, and, since 1928, in the Department of Commerce.

In the last position he has participated in the distribution cost studies for wholesale groceries, hardware, drugs and electrical goods. He is author of several parts of the Louisville Grocery Survey, the St. Louis Drug Survey and a series of articles in Drug Topics.

The forum discussion will be led by W. H. Meserole, business specialist of the Department of Commerce. Mr. Meserole has also had extensive experience in distribution, and was statistician for the American Relief Association.

The meeting will also be the occasion of the installation of the officers who will have charge of the activities of the chapter during the coming year. C. Milton Clark will be succeeded as president by Walter F. Raymond, chief auditor of Griffith-Consumers Co. Vice presidents will be William Lee Slattery, comptroller of the Postoffice Department, and George D. Lane, of Felt & Tarrant Manufacturing Co. John L. Mitchell, of Shannon & Luchs Co., is secretary, and the treasurer is J. M. McLeod, of Standard Engineering Co.

Directors for the coming year are Oscar D. Crockett, of Judd & Detweiler, Inc.; George E. Davis, Fruit Growers Express Co.; B. E. Hunsinger, Benjamin Franklin University; Robert W. King, of the Farm Credit Administration; O'Neal M. Johnson, International Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers; James B. May, Southern Dairies, Inc.; William S. Ritnour, of the National Fertilizer Association.

An invitation to the meeting is extended to all of the drug trade as well as officers of other retail and wholesale firms. The meeting is scheduled for 8 o'clock and will be preceded by a dinner beginning at 6:30.

Eliot Thomson Elected.

Eliot H. Thomson, publicity manager of the Washington Loan & Trust Co., was elected to the senior advisory council of the Financial Advertisers Association at its convention at Syracuse, N. Y. He presided at one of the leading forums of the assembly. William H. Neal, Wachovia Bank & Trust Co., Winston-Salem, N. C., was elected president of the association, and J. J. Harris, New York, of Fenner & Beane, was named a director. Robert L. Flather, an assistant secretary of American Security & Trust Co., also attended the convention.

Dr. Thomson has been associated with the Washington Loan & Trust Co. for many years. He is a member and former chairman of the advertising committee of the District of Columbia Bankers Association for which he has rendered excellent service in the Christmas Savings Club and co-operative advertising campaigns.

Dinner Speaker

MISS STELLA AKIN, special assistant to the U. S. Attorney General, who will address the Women's Committee, Washington Chapter American Institute of Banking Wednesday.

Cotton Drops With Hedging

New York, Sept. 20—(AP).—Under the continued weight of Southern hedge selling, cofton eased into further new low ground today. December sold off from 8.71 to 8.63 and closed at the low with final prices 9 to 11 points net lower.

The market opened 2 to 5 points lower with steadier Liverpool cables failing to influence sentiment in the face of a week-end accumulation of selling orders from the South.

Cottonseed Oil.

Cottonseed oil was easier today under renewed liquidation and commission house selling which uncovered stop-orders. Some positions touched new lows for the season. Lower cotton and weakness in lard were responsible for the selling, while aside from covering there was little demand in evidence. Final prices were 10 to 13 points net lower. Sales, 194 contracts. Bleachable spot, nominally October close, 7.26; December, 7.29; January, 7.32; March, 7.38; May, 7.43.

Stocks Fail to Recover Early Loses in Late Rally; Bonds Lower.

New York, Sept. 20.—Grain prices worked higher, but in nearly every other financial market the price movement was downward. Bonds joined stocks, which receded from a weak opening to a position from 1 to 6 points lower by 1 o'clock. Around that time short covering and a little tentative new buying appeared, gathering momentum as prices responded, and a fairly good recovery took place in leading stocks, but it was insufficient to bring prices up to the previous closing levels. Stock sales increased to around 1,600,000 shares, the largest in a week.

A smattering of trade news over the week-end was rather inconclusive. The steel industry this week, according to the estimate of the American Ion & Steel Institute, will fall a little over 5 per cent to an operating rate of 76.1 per cent of capacity. That is less than 2 points above the operating rate of the corresponding period for last year.

Domestic selling continued from the start hits morning, and was abetted by a considerable volume of foreign sales as foreigners, now that the war scares are dying down, are taking increasing cognizance that the fundamental trouble here is lack of confidence.

A Wall Street man of a lifetime of experience sums up the matter: "It is not war, it is F. D. R. that is troubling the stock market. The situation is similar to that of the mouse in the trap and the piece of cheese. The cheese is as good as ever it was, but the mouse has lost interest. Fundamentally business is now pretty good—much better than many suppose or than the stock market indicates. Moreover, the various restrictions on trading, while making a difference here and there, are by no means responsible in themselves for the persistent selling."

On the technical side, each day of decline naturally brings nearer another rally, and a good recovery in stock prices will do much to restore confidence, if only temporarily. Looked at through any but the political window the weather outside looks altogether too favorable for business to justify the uncertainty now pervading financial centers everywhere, a feeling which must certainly exert some influence on the plans of business management. So far, witnesses say, the effect on public spending has been slight.

Depression Lifter.

It was the great boom in building that lifted the country out of the 1910 depression and started it well on its way to the runaway pace which culminated in 1929. One of the greatest disappointments of the current recovery period has been the insignificant role played by building construction, except that carried on with taxpayers' money. Residential building, although generally about ten years in arrears, continues to lag. Only recently has it shown signs of revival and those who wish to look cheerfully to the future may see in it something which is to tide us over the business recession now setting in and carry us to a new period of greater industrial activity.

Building permits issued and contracts made in last month reveal a considerable decline, but it is noteworthy that in the field of residential construction some progress was made. A study of the residential building industry just completed by the National Bureau of Economic Research uncovers some interesting facts. One is that, contrary to the general impression, the industry reached its peak in 1925, and by 1929 had already gone far on the declining path. In may be assumed that at that time the tightening of interest rates, the steep advance in wages in the building trades and the skyrocketing prices of materials, had shut off all but public construction and speculative building in areas with inflated real estate activity.

Building Gains.

The National Bureau of Economic Research finds that residential building touched bottom in 1934. In 1935 the gain was more than 100 per cent and last year the number of building units for residential use increased by approximately 100 per cent over the record for 1935. Undoubtedly at this time activity would be much greater, with consequent increase in employment, were it not for the sharp increases in wages, particularly in the East, that have taken place in the past few months.

Other factors are favorable. Some declines have occurred in prices of building materials. Mortgage rates are low. Rents are beginning to rise, indicating a possible shortage of desirable dwellings, a more comfortable financial condition among families. After ten years of inconsiderable construction, accompanied by a considerable growth in the population, there is no doubt of the need of more dwellings. Whether the country is to have that important betterment in the standard of living and to business activity seems now to depend on the stand the building trade unionists take.

Railroad Wages.

Despite the optimistic reports of the possibility of a settlement of the rail wage controversy by mediation, many observers feel that no action will be taken until the Interstate Commerce Commission has handed down a decision on the petition of the carriers for an increase in freight rates on basic commodities. Because of the absence of some member of the commission on vacation, no meetings are expected before October 1. The 30-day period of mediation would expire on September 27; so, unless the railroads weaken on their stand that 6 cents per hour increase is their topmost figure, or the labor unions agree to that figure, the controversy will go into the hands of either an arbitration or a fact-finding committee for settlement.

Corn Tumbles And Recovers; Closes Lower

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—In brisk trading with unusually wide fluctuations, September corn today fell 5½ cents, then ran up 6⅜, but again tumbled, closing 2¼ cents net lower.

Uncertainty prevailed as to whether or not some of the larger traders who have been short of supplies to meet their contract obligations to deliver huge quantities of corn this month had yet extricated themselves from market difficulties. This uncertainty was emphasized temporarily by the circumstance that only 126,000 bushels reduction of the amount of uncompleted September contracts was officially shown today to have been accomplished Saturday, whereas a much bigger decrease was expected to be revealed.

At today's close, the corn market as a whole was varying from 2¼ cents lower to 1¼ cents higher compared with Saturday's finish, September 1.02½ December 63¼@63⅞; May, 64½; wheat 1 cent to 2⅛ up; September, 1.04⅞; December, 1.05@1.05⅛; May, 1.06⅞, 107; Oats unchanged to ¾ advganced, December, 30⅜@30⅞; and rye showing ¾,@¼ cents bulge. Provisions results were unchanged to 32 cents lower.

"but what will become of the children . . . and me?"

PERHAPS for you, as for most men, life insurance must form the largest part of the foundation for your family's financial future.

If you have had to drop some of your life insurance, you should make every effort to replace this insurance at the earliest opportunity. It is most important that you bring your insurance up to an amount that will provide the income your family will need.

Consider carefully the way in which your life insurance money will be applied to your family's welfare. Perhaps an insurance company's plan of paying income and principal would be most satisfactory. Perhaps placing your insurance in trust, with the American Security as trustee, would be the better plan. A conference between yourself, your life underwriter and an officer of our Trust Department will enable you to decide.

Give this matter serious thought. What you do or fail to do now, may mean much to your wife and children in years to come.

Gen. Denhardt Slain in Street; Dead Fiancees' Kin Admits Shot

six months ago. He was to go on trial again tomorrow at nearby Newcastle, Ky.

Myers said the general attempted to escape his assailants.

"We started diagonally across the street," Myers said, "when we saw them coming from an auto parked just across the intersection to our left.

"The shots were fired almost as soon as we saw them. The general started to run toward the hotel and I ran to the right to try to get behind a parked auto.

"Several more shots hit the general just as he reached the hotel steps.

"The men came over to me then and the one with the gun was going to shoot me. I threw my hands up and called him by name.

"'Don't shoot me' I pleaded with him. 'I haven't done anything. The other two kept him from shooting me.'"

Known as "Dictator"

Gen. Denhardt forged to the front rank of Kentucky's political life in 40 turbulent years which took him to the battle fronts of three wars, into the feud-ridden Kentucky hills at the head of an army of occupation and into the highest circles of the nation.

Broad-shouldered, portly and erect, with a thundering voice and an imposing carriage, the towering Denhardt was a familiar figure—widely respected and as widely hated—from Mills Point to the Big Sandy.

After a boyhood spent on a Warren County farm, the general entered school in Bowling Green, Ky. His career was delayed while he went to the Spanish-American War, where he served seven months. Upon his return he retained a connection with the militia, in which he rose, until the administratino of Gov. Ruby Laffoon he was its adjutant general and behind its bayonets wielded an authority which earned him the brand of "dictator"

Beside his military career, the young attorney Denhardt built a reputation as a lawyer which in time led to his election as city prosecutor of Bowling Green.

Denhardt led his troops on the Villa expedition and was still in service when the World War came. He was sent to France early in the conflict. Stern, decisive and steel-nerved, he won the admiration of French and British officers and the loyalty of his men.

"A Good Soldier."

"Denhardt was a good soldier, all right," was a grudging tribute voiced many a time in Kentucky by men who could not, otherwise, lay their tongues to epithets they considered vile enough to call him. For gallantry under fire he was cited in dispatches and promoted to lieutenant colonel. He returned to Kentucky a hero and became colonel of a newly organized regiment. This he soon lead into Newport, Ky., to put down strike violence, which he accomplished with such haste and firmness that many labor leaders opposed him without surcease until he was driven from power 15 year later.

The tall colonel kept his military rank when he became Lieutenant Governor of Kentucky under Gov. William J. Fields, in 1923. Again he came to national prominence when he commanded the soldiers who supervised attempts to rescue Floyd Collins, Kentucky hillbilly who was trapped in a cave in the middle twenties and died slowly while all efforts to extricate him failed. Four years of private life, spent in the lucratice practice of law, followed his term as Lieutenant Governor.

Returns to Power.

In 1931 General Denhardt returned to power as Adjutant General. To this title he added that of Brigadier General, U. S. A., Reserve, and to his duties of supervising the State militia he added authorities so vast that no county in the State was free of his influence. He led his State police into Louisville against bootleggers, into feud-bloody Clay County, against a criminal super-government and into the rich Harlan County coal field against other outlaws. Although Kentucky's constitution contained no provision for martial law, the determined Denhardt employed every authority known to the articles of war.

Retires to Farm.

Despite this show of force, the Laffoon-Denhardt regime was repudiated and the 59-year-old Denhardt retired to a farm, newly bought near Lagrange, Ky. He was through with public life for good, he said. His wife had divorced him and he lived with his sister, Bertha.

A man so prominent naturally had the entree to the best circles of that proud and clanish Bluegrass society. Thus, it was that he became acquainted early in 1936 with the beautiful 40-year-old widow, Verna Taylor. Tall, stately, with white skin and black hair and eyes, Verna Taylor, for 20 years, had been the belle of Lagrange. At balls she received as much of gallantry as her daughters and her friends. Cultured and intelligent, she had taken over management of her husband's laundry and other enterprises upon her widowhood and had run them at a profit. She began to be seen more and more often with the stately soldier.

Last summer their engagement was informally announced as Mrs. Taylor was seen wearing an enormous solitaire, the general's gift. His devotion to his fiancee was apparently extreme. The couple spent many days together, looking over sites on his 600-acree estate for a new house they planned to build after they were married.

Upon such an expedition they set out the morning of November 6, 1936. They were seen together in Louisville, at luncheon. In the afternoon the general telephoned to say they could not keep a dinner engagement in the city, because Mrs. Taylor had a headache. They were seen about twilight, in a roadside lunchroom, apparently arguing. And about 9 p. m. they were seen together for the last time, at a filling station several miles on the other side of Lagrange from Louisville.

General Was "Sick."

Mrs. Taylor went to the filling station alone and asked help in starting the general's car. She was excited and in a hurry. A hundred yards away the Denhardt car sat in the shadow of a school house. Men from the station pushed the car down the road into the lights of the station. Not until then did they observe the tall figure huddled in the front seat. The general was "sick," Mrs. Taylor explained.

The car was pushed down the road to the farm house of George Baker. A barber named Hundley went to Lagrange for a new battery for the car and Baker and his wife went into their house, believing the General and Mrs. Taylor had accompanied Hundley. A quarter of an hour later Baker noticed his dog barking and saw Denhardt walking from behind his house toward the road, "very fastly." Baker asked him to come in by the fire. Denhardt replied that he wanted to telephone and was told there was no phone. Although it was a raw night the General returned to his car, and Baker supposed, to Mrs. Taylor.

Pistol Shot Heard.

It was 15 minutes later that a pistol shot boomed down the road, through the walls and closed windows and doors of the Baker home. The farmer and his wife both heard it. Baker was afraid and it was four minutes later that he went out and saw the general standing in the shadow of his car. As he came in view of the soldier, Baker heard a second sound "more of a little popshot, more like a .22 rifle."

"Did you hear that?" Denhardt challenged him. "Wasn't that second shot terrible?"

That second shot a few months later saved the general from a murder conviction, raising the doubt that won him a mistrial.

Hundley and Cuba E. Shaver arrived with a battery. They ran down the road looking for the widow. They insisted that Denhardt come along. They returned and repaired the battery. Shaver and Hundley then took the lead in organizing a search for the woman. With lights they walked down the road, with Denhardt in the middle and 20 feet behind them. "She was the finest woman I ever knew," Denhardt muttered.

Bullet in Heart.

Flat on her back, with a bullet hole in her heart, lay the beautiful widow. Between her left arm and her body was one of her shoes. Her hat was shoved clumsily on her head. Her coat was open. And at her feet was Gen. Denhardt's .45 Army revolver.

Shaver and Baker rushed with Hundley to her side. Gen. Denhardt stood several feet away, off the crown of the road. "Is she dead?" he asked calmly. He made no other outcry or exclamation. He went no closer to the body.

"You know I didn't kill her. I lover her too much!" he protested again and again to the undertaker's assistant when he arrived. His only reference to the body was he asked the coroner to take care of her engagement ring. The ring was found on her finger, covered by her gloves, which she clasped tightly. It was given to Denhardt.

General Denhardt occupied still a high position in the commonwealth, and the sheriff let him go and take his revolver with him. But in a few hours, informed of that betraying lament, "She was the finest woman I ever knew," uttered before the body was found, he and Coroner D. L. Ricketts were at the Denhardt farm. They found the general drunk and abusive. He threatened the officers.

Hatred flamed in the eyes of the hundreds of hill people who watched the trial, heard Denhardt's straightforward sounding story of the tragedy that "turned the peace in which he hoped to spend his declining years into a hell worse than anything he endured on the battlefields of France."

Most of the crowd believed him guilty. But the twelve gaunt hill men who retired to pass judgment bore in mind the second shot and the two empty chambers in Denhardt's gun and through 186 ballots remained seven for acquittal, one for death and four for life imprisonment.

The jury was discharged and a new trial set for tomorrow.

Through all the prosecution the Garr boys, schooled in a tradition of personal honor, went tight-mouthed and grim. Co-operation they gave the prosecutors, but without enthusiasm. Men said freely that it was the code of their kind to allow formal "justice" full scope in avenging their sister's death, and if that failed . . .

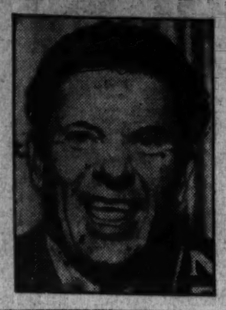
Bob Burns Says—



Not long ago, I wrote an article advisin' people that have somethin' wrong with 'em to get a doctor that specializes in that particular ailment and it seems like I hurt the feelings of the old doctor down home.

Not long after I wrote this article this old doctor heard that I had a touch of neuritis and he came right out to Hollywood.

He said, "I thought I'd better get out here to you before you got ahold of one of them new-fangled specialists." He said, "There ain't a man in the world that knows more about that neuritis than I do." I said, "That's fine but what makes you so sure you can cure me so quick—have you had much experience with neuritis?" and he says "Have I—I've had it for 30 years myself!"

Local Handling Of Delinquents Urged in Report

Child Welfare Division Opposes Commitment to Reform Schools.

The child welfare division in its annual report to Public Welfare Director Elwood Street yesterday urged that the juvenile court commit delinquent children requiring public care to the Board of Public Welfare rather than to the National Training School for Boys or the National Training School for Girls.

"There are at present more than 600 District children under institutional supervision," the report said.

"The development of social service to children in their homes and increased facilities for foster home care should make it possible to keep the total institutional population, at least for the near future, within the limits of 500," the division said, adding that due to "technical limitations" the juvenile court now often commits children without making a study of their needs.

The report notes as "encouraging" the "relatively small number of children" received for care outside their homes.

"The 477 children received represent an increase of 34 over last year," the report stated, "but the number received for care in both of these years is lower than at any time since 1925."

A. F. L. Weighs Ban On Miss Perkins as Convention Guest

By the Associated Press.

The American Federation of Labor may drop Secretary Perkins from the list of those to be invited to address its Denver convention next month.

Federation leaders, it was said tonight in usually well-informed quarters, also are considering dropping J. Warren Madden, chairman of the Labor Relations Board, from the invitation list.

The Secretary of Labor has been invited to A. F. of L. conventoins as long as there has been a Labor Department. The chairman of the Labor Board has been invited since the first board was set up in 1933. Miss Perkins has spoken at each convention since she took office.

Colleague Praises Endeavour Master

Boston, Sept. 20 (AP).—Confidence in Capt. Ned Heard, skipper of the crew of 20 that sailed the British racing sloop Endeavour I out of Newport for England more than a week ago, was expressed tonight by Capt. Wallace Grint, of Viva, the motor yacht from which Endeavour I parted 200 miles off Nantucket lightship.

"If seamanship could save Endeavour I, then the finest man in all England had charge," was the way Capt. Grant put it. Four Coast Guard vessels continued their search.

Utility Firm's Lawyer Cited for Slur on Fairness of Commission

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Power Commission, interpreting a statement by C. Edward Paxson, counsel for subsidiaries of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., as "an attempt to impugn the integrity of the commission," cited him yesterday to show cause why he should not be barred from practice before it.

Clyde L. Seavey, vice chairman of the commission, notified Paxson he has until September 24 to explain why he should not be barred.

Paxson Quoted.

The commission said that Paxson, in a statement issued in New York concerning the withdrawal of seven officers and directors of the Associated Gas & Electric system, had been quoted as saying:

"These men resigned from the positions which they held because it was felt that the very considerable expense involved, legal and otherwise, as well as the loss of time of the individuals in attending the hearings which the Federal Power Commission had called, were not justified, when there was reason to believe that the decision of the the commission would be adverse, regardless of the merits of the matter."

Ethics Questioned.

Seavey wired Paxson that the statement, "if issued as reported, would constitute an attempt to impugn the integrity of the commission and does not conform to the standards of ethical conduct required of practitioners before the commission."

Through Examiner Frank A. Hampton, the commission allowed the seven officers and directors of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. to withdraw their applications to hold interlocking positions in interstate public utility companies.

R. S. Keebler, commission counsel, said he would have preferred that the hearing be held, but added the commission had no alternative but to allow withdrawal of the applications. Those withdrawing their applications were:

"Retreat Under Fire."

The utility holding company act of 1935 provides that no person may hold office in more than one interstate public utility without the commission's consent.

Lowe Estate $1,250,000.

LaGuardia Splits With Labor Party

New York, Set. 20 (AP).—The American labor party, on whose ticket Mayor F. H. LaGuardia is running for re-election as well as on the Republican and Fusion tickets, parted company today with the mayor on his endorsement of George U. Harvey for borough president of Queens.

Alex Rose, executive secretary, said the party would not indorse Harvey because he was "hysterical in his hatred of labor and progressive ideas."

Two Navy Cadets Die in Air Crash On Long Island

Two Navy aviation cadets were killed yesterday when their plane crashed on an estate near Brookville, Long Island. Cadet Stewart A. M. McKenzie, of Winchester, Mass., the pilot, was dead when aid arrived. Cadet R. A. Schmidt, of Albion, Ill., died a few hours later in a hospital.

Both flyers, attached to the Carrier Yorktown, now stationed at Newport News, Va., were en route from Squantum, Mass., to Newport News when the crash occurred. They were on a training cruise, bad weather delaying their start on the home flight until yesterday.
